Arabs see 'paper' as obsolete; Israel to review Geneva prospects

By ANAN SAFADI
Middle East Affairs Editor

A neighbouring Arab capital is regarding as obsolete the U.S. working paper on procedural aspects for reconvening the Geneva conference. Prime Minister Menachem Begin plans to review the prospects of peace negotiations with ambassador Samuel Lewis on Wednesday.

The ambassador is expected to arrive before the meeting to present a summary of Arab reaction to the five-week-old procedural aspects as well as a U.S. assessment of moves.

U.S. is reported to be sounding Russian on possible negotiations on Middle East issues with an Arab delegation, including a thirteenth, rather than with a state delegation as proposed in the initial U.S.-Israel working paper.

U.S. is reportedly considering suggestions to get the conference started without involving parties in formulating detailed terms.

It is believed that Ambassador Lewis is scheduled to meet with Prime Minister Begin and Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan on Wednesday.

Jerusalem with Premier Begin, Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan and Defence Minister Ezer Weizman. But the discussion was overshadowed by the Southern Lebanon developments.

Israeli and U.S. sources yesterday discounted a UPI report from Cairo that the U.S. has forwarded a new Geneva formula — substituting for the initial working paper — to Egypt.

Although he had something to say about Geneva, Mr. Lewis mentioned nothing about a new formula, Begin told newsmen after yesterday's meeting. He said that the American ambassador would have definitely referred to it if the report were true.

Begin said that he was not aware of any proposals forwarded by the Americans beyond the U.S.-Israel working paper. However, he noted that should the U.S. present new suggestions "we shall consider them" — but he cautioned that Jerusalem would object to substantial changes in that paper.

The Prime Minister pointedly emphasized Israel's objection to changes in the clause calling for negotiations between Israel and each of the neighbouring countries individually on peace treaties.

Earlier in the day Begin issued a statement welcoming Egyptian

President Anwar Sadat's declared readiness to come to the Knesset to negotiate a settlement. He hoped that this Egyptian leader was not pronouncing "mere words." Begin said he would personally welcome Sadat at the airport. (Leader, p. 14)

But at the same time, Begin declared: "Israel categorically and absolutely rejects the conditions named by President Sadat — (i.e.) total withdrawal to the June 1967 lines and establishment of a so-called Palestinian state. These terms, it is known, would constitute a danger to the very existence of the State of Israel. However, President Sadat could put forward this position at the Geneva conference, just as we shall put forward our own stand at the conference. Let no party turn its own stand into a prior condition for participating in the peace forum."

There were reports from Cairo, meanwhile, that Egypt is currently trying to persuade other Arab countries to back its new position of going anywhere and doing anything to sweep away procedural obstacles to a reconvened Middle East peace conference at Geneva.

The Egyptians, it is understood, were planning to press this position at a conference of Arab foreign ministers in Tunisia tomorrow.

U.S. Won't isolate Israel

By WOLF BLITZER
Jerusalem Post Correspondent

WASHINGTON. — Secretary of State Vance last night disclosed that the U.S. "will not participate in a UN conference on racism if it is on its agenda to isolate Israel."

U.S. officials are reported to be preparing a speech for delivery to the Council of Jewish Communities and Welfare Funds in Dallas, Texas, on Wednesday. The speech, which will be given by a U.S. official, is expected to state that the U.S. "will continue to support Israel in its fight against those who isolate her."

U.S. officials also declared that the U.S. "will do anything that would isolate Israel, by trying to force pressure through the UN, military or economic means."

Rabbinate race called 'ugliest in memory'

By JUDY SIEGEL
Jerusalem Post Reporter

Supporters of the two rivals for the office of Ashkenazi chief rabbi of Jerusalem succeeded this week in winning separate letters of recommendation for both candidates from the venerable Jerusalem sage, Rabbi Shlomo Yosef Zevin.

The Jerusalem Post has learned that supporters of Rabbi Bezalel Zolti (Sephardi Chief Rabbi Ovadia Yosef's choice for the post) and of Rabbi Dov Lior (Ashkenazi Chief Rabbi Shlomo Goren's preference) called on the ailing, 81-year-old rabbi to win an endorsement of their respective rabbis.

On Monday, Rabbi Zevin signed a warm endorsement of Rabbi Zolti, which was duplicated by his supporters and sent to all members of the electoral college, who on Sunday will elect the capital's first Ashkenazi chief rabbi in 15 years.

Backers of Rabbi Lior, formerly of Kfar HaRosh and currently rosh yeshiva of the Kiryat Arba Yeshiva, then visited Rabbi Zevin, armed with an endorsement of Rabbi Lior from Rabbi Zvi Yehuda Kook, and implored him for a letter of endorsement.

In yesterday's National Religious Party newspaper "Hatzofeh," Rabbi Zevin wrote: "After I learned from credible and authoritative sources that Rabbi Dov Lior... is also a great Tora scholar, I believe that he too is worthy of serving as the chief rabbi of Jerusalem."

The letter appeared as an advertisement on the newspaper's front page.

Rabbinical observers told The Post that the heated contest for the capital's spiritual leadership was "one of the ugliest in memory." The Jerusalem Municipality received what it called a "forged letter," on Monday, from a supporter of Rabbi Zolti, in which Rabbi Zolti was disparaged in the blackest terms.

Rabbi David Shlomo, candidate for Sephardi chief rabbi of Jerusalem, said at a press conference yesterday that he was appalled by the tactics used in the race. He objected to "interference" by Sephardi Chief Rabbi Ovadia Yosef, who has warmly endorsed the chief rabbi of Morocco, Rabbi Shalom Moshé, for the post.

"I see no reason why Israel has to import a candidate for chief rabbi of Jerusalem," he added. Rabbi Yosef, in a statement later, said he did not accept a number of Rabbi Shlomo's halachic rulings, and that Rabbi Moshé is a renowned and highly learned sage.

Another rabbi who has decided not to present his candidacy for Jerusalem's chief rabbi — despite calls from men at the highest level of government — admitted to The Post last night that Rabbi Yosef had told him not to run and had asked him to leave the field open for Rabbi Zolti.

Vienna millionaire kidnapped

VIENNA (Reuters). — Kidnappers seized a leading Austrian clothing manufacturer late Wednesday night and have demanded a ransom of about $5 million, police sources said yesterday.

Walter Michael, 74, owner of a chain of furwear shops, was snatched from his car as he was driving through Vienna and bundled into another vehicle, the sources said.

A police spokesman refused to give any details of the kidnapping.

saying "a human life is at stake."

The sources said a ransom note was found in Michael's car after it was stopped.

Police spokesmen confirmed the kidnapping but said no further information would be released on the case in order to protect Michael.

The seizure of Michael, a well-known millionaire, was the latest in a spate of kidnappings of prominent European businessmen or members of their families. But it was the first of its kind in Austria.

Carter declines to condemn Israeli retaliatory raids

By WOLF BLITZER
Jerusalem Post Correspondent

WASHINGTON. — President Jimmy Carter said yesterday that the recent fighting along the Israel-Lebanese border has underscored the immediate necessity to reconvene the Geneva Middle East peace conference as quickly as possible.

"The whole thing is just sitting and teetering on another outbreak of even more major violence," the President told a White House news conference.

Carter acknowledged that the Israeli retaliatory strikes were "perhaps" excessive, but he refused to condemn Israel. "I think that at this time condemnation of people is probably inappropriate," the President said.

"I think that the overriding consideration is not to condemn Israel at this point for retaliation, but just to say that if the provocations were absent, then the retaliation would have been unnecessary," he added. The best way for the matter to be resolved, he continued, is for Israel and the Arab states to begin immediate, "face-to-face" negotiations at Geneva.

On the question of whether the Israeli response was justified, the President at first said that this was "a question that is for me to answer — whether Israel can sit dormant and quietly accept repeated attacks on her border villages without retaliation or whether the retaliation was excessive."

"These are questions that I think both answers would be, perhaps, yes."

(In Jerusalem, Prime Minister Menachem Begin last night termed the Carter pronouncement as a "good statement.")

Ever since the weekend outbreak along the Lebanese frontier, American officials have been urging restraint on all the parties involved. The U.S. has been in close contact through diplomatic channels with Israel, Lebanon, Syria and others, attempting to restore the cease-fire in the region.

On Wednesday, top U.S. national security officials gathered in the White House situation room to reassess the Middle East in light of the clash.

It was clear yesterday that Carter was very concerned by the situation, and he minced no words in seeking to restore the relative calm. In doing so, he praised Israel and Egypt for accepting a U.S.-sponsored formula for resolving procedural problems in advance of the Geneva conference.

And the President urged Syria, Jordan and Lebanon to follow suit, and to stop "the procedural debates and squabbles about exactly how to go (to Geneva) and exactly what representation will be present." He called on these countries "to start dealing with the real issues."

Israeli officials here were pleased by the President's remarks at the news conference. In the past the U.S. has condemned Israeli retaliatory strikes. But this time, the U.S. stopped short of doing so.

"This new outbreak of violence is of great concern to us, and I think, to the nations in the Middle East and to the people of the world," Carter said. "The unwarranted and continuing terrorist attacks have been part of the Middle East picture for years. The retaliatory measures taken by nations who were attacked by terrorists have been part of the picture in the Middle East for years."

"I think it shows the volatile nature there of the continuing problem. I think it shows in a much more vivid way than, perhaps, in the recent past, the need for an immediate convening of the Geneva conference as soon as we can — to get these national leaders to sit down, on a continuing basis and work out face-to-face, these divisions that have existed in the Middle East for generations."

The President said that "loss of life is deplorable, but the situation is never going to be improved, in my opinion, until these nations there are willing to step beyond the procedural debates and squabbles..."

Continuing, Carter said: "I have been pleased that the Israeli government has adopted the procedures for a Geneva conference that we proposed. I was pleased by the statement yesterday by President Sadat that he was willing to go to Geneva or anywhere else and to begin to consult directly with Israel and with the other Arab nations, without quibbling any more about the detailed wording of the procedures."

Carter said that the Egyptian and the Israeli position is "our position," adding: "I hope that Jordan and Syria and Lebanon very quickly will make a similar response to us, and that we can then convene the Geneva conference."

Reports and film from southern Lebanon were prominently featured in the American media yesterday, including the eye-witness accounts showing considerable civilian casualties. The network television news programmes showed film of a Lebanese mother who said that all her children were killed in the Israeli air strike.

Carter sending Jewish aide here

Jerusalem Post Correspondent

WASHINGTON. — The Carter administration is sending a White House domestic political aide who maintains extensive contacts with the American Jewish community on an eight-day "fact-finding" tour to Israel next week.

Mark Siegel, a deputy to special assistant Hamilton Jordan, will meet with Prime Minister Menachem Begin and other leaders, as well as with dozens of "ordinary" Israelis to hear their views on U.S.-Israel relations. He will then report to Jordan and to President Jimmy Carter.

Siegel will come to Israel with a delegation of congressmen, led by House Majority Leader Jim Wright (D-Texas).

Siegel is a former executive director of the Democratic National Committee. He is one of several Jewish White House officials, serving as an informal liaison with the U.S. Jewish community.

Begin and U.S. envoy confer on Lebanon

Post Diplomatic Reporter

Prime Minister Menachem Begin yesterday called U.S. Ambassador Samuel Lewis to his Jerusalem bureau to relay through him Israel's "profound regrets" for any civilian losses suffered during Wednesday's retaliatory air raids against terrorist bases in southern Lebanon.

Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan and Defence Minister Ezer Weizman also attended the meeting, at which the general situation in southern Lebanon was discussed.

"The reports of civilian casualties in the Israeli air force action should prove correct, Israel expresses its profound regrets for these losses," the Premier said. He added that Israel, however, does not apologize for the operation which was launched as the northern resort town of Nahariya buried the third victim in 48 hours of terrorist Katyusha attacks.

The Prime Minister said that the air force sought out as its targets concentrations of terrorists, and that combat pilots conformed with their orders meticulously.

Begin pointed out that Nahariya had been shelled brutally for two days, adding that Israel would on no account tolerate a state of affairs in which innocent heads of families are hit with Katyushas, leaving their children suddenly orphaned.

The Prime Minister said that Israel did not wish to shed anyone's blood, but would defend itself with every means at its disposal. If the other side keeps quiet, he said, there will be absolute quiet on this side. (Continued on page 2, col. 1)

Two infants hurt in terrorist shelling

METULLA. — Two infants in the south Lebanese village of Marjayoun were wounded by terrorist shelling and brought to hospital in Safad via the "Good Fence." Israeli Radio reported late last night.

Otherwise, the northern border was quiet yesterday following Wednesday's air force bombings of terrorist concentrations in southern Lebanon.

Tourists were again seen at the "Good Fence," and Lebanese farmers returned to their fields.

Israel cuts F-16 orders

Jerusalem Post Staff and Agencies

TEL AVIV. — Israel will cut back its order for America's ultra-modern F-16 fighter plane from 230 to 130 because it is not being allowed to produce a substantial part of the aircraft in Israel, a Defence Ministry official said, according to a Reuters report yesterday.

Israel cuts F-16 orders

Representatives of the General Dynamics Corporation, manufacturers of the F-16, visited Israel about two months ago and proposed that Israel produce 5 per cent of the plane, the official reportedly said.

"But to turn out even that small portion of the plane we would have to buy $100m. worth of manufacturing equipment and set up a whole assembly line. Our economists believe it is just not worth it," he said.

An administration official in Washington confirmed yesterday that it had been decided to refuse Israel the co-production rights it wanted for the F-16. But Israeli diplomatic sources in Washington said the U.S. administration has not notified them of any decision on the co-production request. Industry and administration sources said, however, that the administration has sided with the Pentagon in deciding against an Israeli request to build the airframe and certain electronic components for 230 of the planes.

Tamir: No decision yet on black money amnesty

By DAVID LENNON
Jerusalem Post Reporter
TEL AVIV. — The government hasn't decided what to do with persons in possession of black money, Shmuel Tamir, the new Minister of Justice, said here yesterday. Tamir was referring to persons who possess undeclared sums of money which they hid to avoid paying income tax. He said in a talk with economic reporters that the black money issue was "complicated" and involved moral, social, economic and legal considerations. He said he did not know what terms the government might offer to induce persons to declare black money they may be holding. On other subjects, Tamir said it would take "some time" for the public and industry to adjust to the new economic policy. However, he said it was essential for Israel to pass through this new phase in its economic history in order to reach financial maturity. Comparing Israelis to prisoners who had just been released from jail by the new economic policy, Tamir said: "The first few days are busy and exciting but then the former prisoner becomes confused and uncertain and needs time to adjust to freedom." In reference to areas under his jurisdiction, the minister noted that laws formulated during Israel's birth and adolescent years are no longer applicable to a modern developed state. Tamir said he is working on plans to replace the "archaic" Ottoman laws and British Common Law still in force with a new Israeli Civil Code. He said he wants modern law to be clear so Israeli citizens will know their rights. One of the first bills Tamir wants to present to the Knesset would be a consumers' protection law to offer buyers redress against manufacturers who sell faulty products. "A free economy also means more responsibility," he said, clearly referring to businessmen. Tamir said the government must complete the Income Tax reform. He said the wage structure was too complex and composed of too many items. As an example, he noted that the regulations on the taxation of car expenses still force people to cheat. He also spoke of a re-examination of handling and inheritance laws.

Little chance seen for DMC joining Histadrut 'cabinet'

By JOSHUA BRILLIANT
Post Political Reporter
TEL AVIV. — Leaders of the Labour Party and the Democratic Movement for Change have been talking about the possibility of the DMC's joining the Histadrut "cabinet" — the Central Committee. Such a development may cause an awkward situation with the DMC now in the government coalition. But political sources here said the chances that the DMC would enter the Central Committee are dim. The Labour-DMC feelers were limited to personal conversations, but not with Secretary-General Yeruham Meshel, the head of the DMC Histadrut faction, Yisrael Granit, told The Jerusalem Post. Labour whip Shimon Avizemer told this reporter that the DMC's conduct at the convention and support of Meshel's candidacy for another term of office had brought it "closer rather than further." But there are several problems: The DMC supports the government's new economic policy and favours compulsory arbitration in essential services in contrast with the Labour Party's stand. Granit said his party cannot com-

Absorption of cash from public disappoints Gafny

By SELOMO MAOR
Jerusalem Post Reporter
Bank of Israel Governor Arnon Gafny yesterday disclosed that the absorption of cash from the public as a result of the new economic policy has been less than expected. Although financial investments representing savings came to IL1.5b. in the first week of the NEP, not all of the amount was "mopped-up" money, because part of the funds came from alternative forms of savings, such as investment in Nafat dollars, and part came from bank credits which will show up as liquidity deficits. In addition, there was an injection of Israeli currency, as a result of the net sale of $60m. to the banks. The foreign currency reserves of the central bank did not, however, increase by the full amount. Gafny said that there had been little conversions of deposits originating in German restitution payments. Speaking to the Bank of Israel advisory council, Gafny said that there was no room for complacency. Monetary contraction and fiscal restraint, he added, are necessary conditions for the successful implementation of the government's economic policy, which aims at increasing the share of the dollar-earning sectors of the economy.

A 15 per cent rise in the local post and telephone rates authorized yesterday by the Finance Committee. The new prices, which average less than a 50 rise in overseas post and telecommunication rates, will be from the end of November. Act date they go into effect is named by the Commu Ministry. The price of a single telegram within one dialling zone will be 38 ag. instead of 33 ag. — an 15 per cent rise because of the Value Added Tax defence impact. Telephone telegrams, measuring the number of calls on a telephone and the which block all outgoing national calls will not rise. Installing a telephone will IL1,750 instead of IL1,500. Basic monthly charge for a line will be IL35 plus 10 ag. of IL148, and in other countries IL38 plus tax. Postal rates are also going up. A postcard will be 70 ag. instead of 65 ag.; an ordinary telegram IL13 instead of IL12.60. Parcels will also be more expensive to mail. Communications spokesman said that the were necessary to the ministry's deficit from rise than IL600m.

p Moscow attorney is willing defend Anatoly Shcharansky

By SARAH HONIG
Jerusalem Post Reporter

VIV. — The head of the anti-communist, attorney Nikolayevich yesterday said he was willing to represent Anatoly Shcharansky in court at his trial for espionage.

Shcharansky, whose official title is an official of the Soviet Consulate in Jerusalem, is here as a guest of the Soviet Consulate (List) on the occasion of the 60th anniversary of the Russian Revolution.

Shcharansky's defense counsel, who was asked why he was taking the case, said that he was a lawyer and that he was willing to take the case.

Shcharansky's mother, Ida, and his friends have been reliably reported to be searching for an attorney. In the USSR, attorneys are not represented by a bar, but the investigation is being conducted by the KGB.

Shcharansky's mother, Ida, and his friends have been reliably reported to be searching for an attorney. In the USSR, attorneys are not represented by a bar, but the investigation is being conducted by the KGB.

Moscow attorney Konstantin Aprakyn in Tel Aviv yesterday.

gully plea at the trial was expelled from the USSR several days ago. She is Dina Kaminskaya, a noted defender of dissidents, who was forbidden by the prosecutor to take the case.

Shcharansky's mother is reported to have gone to six other lawyers only to be turned down or told that they will take the case only on condition that her son pleads guilty — an admission that could cost the defendant his life.

Aprakyn told The Post, "Of course Miss Kaminskaya could not take the case, because she is not in the USSR. As for defense lawyers in Israel, I am not a lawyer, but I am a professional. Had I known of any attorney who made a guilty plea a prior condition for taking a case, I would demand that he be disbarred. A jurist exists to defend people," the head of the Moscow bar declared.

Aprakyn, who was interviewed at the Israel-USSR Friendship House in Tel Aviv, then smiled and said, "Shcharansky will be guaranteed the lawyer of his choice. Let his mama come to me if she wishes. I will guarantee her son a defense without prior conditions, with the plea Shcharansky wants to enter."

This reporter showed Aprakyn the text of a Tass commentary by one of the official Soviet news agency's leading analysts, Victor Vladimirov, in which Shcharansky is pronounced guilty even before his trial. Vladimirov finds Shcharansky an "unsavory character," accuses him of being a "traitor" and concludes by saying that "the traitor of his motherland will be punished with all the strictness of Soviet law and in keeping with its letter and spirit."

Does this not suggest that Shcharansky had not in fact already been convicted and that the trial is no more than a facade, The Post asked.

"If you value my opinion," Aprakyn replied, "this is not so. Our constitution guarantees that only a court can decide if a man is a spy. Until there is an official verdict all that is printed in any newspaper — be it 'Pravda,' 'Izvestiya' or whatever — is immaterial. As a lawyer at this stage I cannot say if the man is guilty or innocent."

However, he discounted President Carter's denials that Shcharansky had been a CIA agent, remarking that "the American President is not always known for speaking the truth."

They also brought 100 wedding guests from France and 50 from the U.S. who joined 150 invitees from Israel last night in the Hilton ballroom — and were visited by Prime Minister Menachem Begin, who was greeted with tumultuous applause.

New suspect charged in kidnapping and rape of 15-year-old girl

TEL AVIV (Him). — Another suspect in the kidnapping and rape of a 15-year-old Georgian schoolgirl was indicted at the District Court here yesterday.

The prosecution claims that the 20-year-old suspect, whose name has been withheld, helped a friend kidnap and rape the girl.

On August 12, last year, the suspect is alleged to have lured the girl into a car, ostensibly to take her to the Bat Yam Municipality, where she was to have helped him fill out some forms.

When they picked up his friend and started driving in the wrong direction, the girl became suspicious. She signalled a police van at the Ashdod intersection, and was freed.

Following the incident, the girl's family moved and her parents warned her not to meet with the two men.

According to the indictment, the HAIFA. — Eli and Mary Garson, the aged tourist couple who were left penniless after a burglar had broken into their hotel room here, have left Israel after all. They cancelled their trip to Cyprus a fortnight ago on the day their boat was to sail.

Garson was taken ill. They had been given free food and lodging at the Palma Home for the Aged in Herzliya Bet, which happened to have a vacant room.

Manager Eli Gur had the home's doctor examine Garson, and he was referred to Sheba medical centre at Tel Hashomer. There his condition was found to call for surgery.

Garson told The Jerusalem Post last night that the diagnosis "appeared to be cancer" and that he might not have long to live.

Gur said the hospital was treating the patient free of charge and that a bank account for contributions for them had been opened at the Bank Leumi branch in Herzliya (no. 31270/42).

Better medical services for Gaza Strip

By ZVI ARENSTEIN
Jerusalem Post Reporter

GAZA. — A new coronary care unit at Shifa Hospital, a new psychiatric department there, and a general improvement in neighbourhood health clinics were some of the recent advances listed here yesterday by Dr. Eli Lash, civilian health officer of the Gaza Strip.

Lash added the construction of another health clinic would start on Monday.

He made these remarks in answer to a question directed at Health Minister Eliezer Shostak concerning improvements in Gaza's health services since the government's decision to equalize standards in the administered territories with those in Israel.

Shostak was in Gaza for the graduation ceremony of two classes of practical nurses and the dedication of a new school for registered nurses.

Shostak told the Gazans in his speech that many plans are being prepared in the Health Ministry in light of the services decision, but when later questioned by The Jerusalem Post he could not give specific details of the new programme.

The school for registered nurses, which currently consists of 43 pupils, has been in existence for over a year but was dedicated yesterday. At the ceremonies some 50 local students received their diplomas for last year's class of practical nurses at Shifa Hospital. It brings to a total of 257 the number of nurses graduated from the school since its inception in 1971.

A press release from the Gaza military government notes that there are now some 450 nurses working in the Gaza Strip, as opposed to 200 in 1967. It states that there is presently one nurse for every two hospital beds in Gaza — almost the same level as in Israel.

Journalists want more

TEL AVIV (Him). — The National Federation of Israeli Journalists yesterday demanded immediate compensation from daily newspaper publishers and the Broadcasting Authority for the recent rise in the cost of living.

The unanimous resolution, passed by the national union's executive called for negotiations to start now to determine the amount of the compensation.

Majd el-Kurum suspects ordered held for 15 days

ACRE. — A magistrate here yesterday ordered 20 residents of Majd el-Kurum held for 15 days on suspicion of taking part in riots Tuesday after an illegally built house was demolished in the village.

Ahmed Massari was killed and 22 policemen and 13 villagers were injured in the clash. The villagers remained in custody are suspected of attacking policemen, taking part in a riot and unlawful assembly. The invalid owner of the house which was wrecked by Interior Ministry personnel, Hassan Kwan, was ordered held for 48 hours, as was his father who is ill.

The Acre magistrate held the hearing in the Acre police club to avoid disturbances by residents of Majd el-Kurum.

Ahmed Massari will be buried in Majd el-Kurum at 2 p.m. today. The detained villagers had asked the magistrate through their attorney for permission to attend the funeral but this was denied. The magistrate accepted the police argument that the detained villagers' presence at the funeral could aggravate the already tense atmosphere in Majd el-Kurum.

Meanwhile hundreds of Galilee Arabs yesterday visited the village where schools remained closed and workers stayed at home to protest the arrests and police behaviour during the riots.

Cities given IL200m. to get out of red

By SARAH HONIG
Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — Representatives of the Union of Local Authorities yesterday secured an additional IL200m. allocation from the government for the country's municipalities.

The union officials, at a meeting with the ministers of finance and the interior, explained their fears that the local authorities would be some IL350m. deeper in the red as a result of the government's new economic policy.

Finance Minister Simcha Ehrlich then instructed his ministry to increase the allocations to the local authorities by another IL200m.

The rest of the union's demands for funds to make up the additional deficit will be studied by a three-man committee representing the union and the two ministries. The committee will make its recommendations in three weeks. If no agreement is reached by that time, the matter will be decided by the ministers of finance and the interior.

Union secretary-general Ze'ev Meillon told The Jerusalem Post that "this is a serious move in our direction by the government. We were glad to find understanding for the plight of local governments."

The union had threatened to curtail educational and welfare services should the cities not receive more funds from the government.

THE ASSOCIATION of Americans and Canadians in Israel, Haifa branch, has expanded its library at Moadon Haoleh, 124 Sderot Hanaasi, to include over 5,000 volumes in English. The library is open to the general public on Sundays and Mondays from 9 a.m. to noon, and on Tuesdays from 4 to 5:30 p.m. Membership is IL25 per year.

Counterfeit dollars

HAIFA (Him). — A young man from Tirat Carmel was yesterday ordered held for seven days by a magistrate here on suspicion of distributing counterfeit $100 bills.

A police representative claimed that the suspect, Moshe Sarur, 21, is connected with a gang of counterfeiters. He said Sarur had cashed five $100 bills in a Haifa bank recently, asked the bank to deposit the proceeds from the sale in a savings account be opened on the spot, and withdrew the money in Israel pounds two days later.

UK may call another Rhodesia peace meet

LONDON (UPI). — Britain is considering calling another Rhodesian peace conference — possibly in Malta — in a bid to end the continuing deadlock over transfer of power to a black majority government in 1978, government officials said yesterday.

The Foreign Office refused confirmation, but said Malta is one of several possible sites under discussion for holding such a meeting.

A spokesman said possible dates and places for such a conference were discussed at a recent meeting at Dar es Salaam between Lord Carver, Britain's resident commissioner-designate for Rhodesia, and leaders of the nationalist Patriotic Front.

Carver, who returned on Wednesday night from an apparently unsuccessful round of talks through Southern Africa, including a meeting with Rhodesian Premier Ian Smith, was scheduled to report to Foreign Secretary David Owen yesterday.

John Graham, an assistant under-secretary at the Foreign Office, also was to report to Owen on separate talks he had earlier this week to explain details of the Anglo-American peace plan for Rhodesia to white and black leaders there.

Owen will make a statement on Rhodesia to Parliament today during a debate on the annual motion to renew sanctions against the breakaway former self-governing colony for another year.

British press reports differed on the actual nature of the planned meeting in Malta. Some said it would only be between Carver and Patriotic Front leaders. Others said the British government will invite Smith and leaders of all the various Rhodesian factions to a full scale "make or break" peace conference.

In Salisbury, meanwhile, Smith said the Anglo-American majority rule blueprint has serious flaws that must be removed if the plan is to succeed.

Smith's statement came in a message to "friends of Rhodesia" associations abroad. It was released on the eve of the 12th anniversary of Rhodesia's unilateral declaration of independence from Britain.

"We have had 12 incredible years," he said, "against all odds and most predictions, we have prospered where we might have failed, and grown stronger where we might have fallen into decline."

Smith has expressed opposition to the plan's provision that Rhodesia be governed by a British resident commissioner with wide powers during a transitional pre-majority rule period. Smith has also resisted the proposal that the Rhodesia armed forces be replaced by an army based mostly on black nationalist guerrillas.

Greek Catholic Archbishop Hilarion Capucci kisses Shafik al-Hout, personal representative of Yasser Arafat and top PLO official in Beirut, at their meeting in Rome Wednesday. (AP wirephoto)

'Jesus was first fedayeen,' Capucci tells PLO official

ROME (AP). — Greek Archbishop Hilarion Capucci, released from an Israeli prison on Sunday, held a two-hour meeting on Wednesday with a representative of terrorist leader Yasser Arafat and said he would continue to back the Palestinian fight against Israel.

"Jesus Christ was the first fedayeen. I am just following his example," the 55-year-old prelate said during a conversation in the presence of photographer Zouher Sa'ad, an assignment here for his newspaper, "Al-Safir" in Beirut.

Capucci, who served nearly three years of a 12-year sentence for smuggling arms to Palestinian terrorists in Jerusalem and the West Bank, was released after a personal appeal by Pope Paul VI to the Israeli authorities.

Capucci met with Shafik al-Hout, sent as the personal representative of Arafat. Al-Hout, who is the top man in the Palestine Liberation Organization in Beirut, has been in Rome since Capucci's arrival on Sunday.

The archbishop said that his prison cell in Israel was 1.4 metres by 3 metres and that it had no windows.

"I couldn't see the sun. There was no light and day," he said.

He said that he spent his time reading and praying, and "that's enough for a man like me."

Capucci said that despite the harsh conditions, he would have preferred to stay in prison if it meant staying in Jerusalem. He said he left only because the Israelis put him out.

He said they had forced the Vatican to agree, as a condition for his release, that he would not be sent to any neighbouring Arab country and would be sent, instead, to the Americas or some other distant place.

Capucci, a native of Syria, said he was "still working" in an effort to go back to his people. He had been the chief pastor of a 4,500 Melchite Catholic, an Eastern rite church which recognizes the supremacy of the Pope.

"This is my work. That's why God chose me to be the Archbishop of Jerusalem," he said.

Capucci told al-Hout to take back to "stay in your place and fight to get Jerusalem back."

Arms embargo on South Africa 'too late to hurt military power'

PARIS (Reuter). — France's total ban on arms supplies to South Africa under the UN's mandatory embargo has come too late to damage Pretoria's military power in the immediate future, according to senior French officials.

Military sources here said that South Africa had been careful to stockpile arms and spare parts from France and elsewhere in anticipation of international moves to cut off supplies completely.

Furthermore, the South Africans have arranged to build aircraft, missiles and armoured vehicles under licensing arrangements with France which will be difficult or impossible to cancel.

"I am afraid we are closing the stable door after the horse has bolted," a leading French arms manufacturer said.

The most immediate impact of the ban will be on the South African navy. France will not permit delivery of four warships — two corvettes and two submarines — nearing completion in French shipyards.

These are the last contracts outstanding after a decade of massive French arms supplies to South Africa.

French shipbuilders said South Africa has claimed the ships are already its property, and Pretoria is expected to insist on taking possession. But French government officials insisted that handing the vessels over was out of the question.

The contracts for the ships are estimated to be worth 150m. francs (more than $140m.), 60 per cent of which has already been paid.

One of the corvettes, the Good Hope, is already manned by a South African crew and flying the South African flag. The warship has been confined to the inner harbour of Lorient on the Atlantic coast, with its way to the open sea blocked by a drawbridge.

French Defence Minister Yvon Bourges has said that South Africa is producing Mirage F-1 fighter-bombers, Panhard armoured cars and Crotale anti-aircraft missiles under French licence. "South Africa has acquired the licence and has all the blueprints," he said. "France no longer has any say in the matter."

But the problem is not quite as simple as this, according to informed sources, who say two kinds of licensing agreements have been concluded by France and South Africa.

In the case of land equipment, South Africa is entitled to produce an unlimited quantity of Panhard armoured cars and a whole range of missiles.

Since the 1960s, South Africa has been producing the Eland armoured car, a version of the French Panhard AMX. It is now thought to possess 1,600 of these vehicles.

The licence covering the Mirage F-1 provides for the construction of a maximum of 48 aircraft, with French officials ensuring that this limit is not breached.

Senior officials at the Marcel Dassault company, while the Mirage F-1, South Africa could build helicopters of the large fleet of French Pumas and Super-Pumas. South Africa broke into the arms market when it bought the Mirage F-1. It was in power. He also said that other equipment in weapons, African uranium, badly France's nuclear strike. But President Valéry Giscard d'Estaing has had to veto international pre-emptive from third over the supply of arms.

A partial embargo, but naval equipment, two years ago, and added to the last last trip to East Africa. Minister Louis de Guiringaud has had to veto international pre-emptive from third over the supply of arms.

But until the embargo acted the last loophole open — the existing four vessels, and agricultural manufacture of weapons.

With the French navy for new warships to replace vessels. President Giscard d'Estaing's government to refund Pretoria, and vetoes and submarines said.

France's feuding leftists fail to resolve differences

PARIS (AP). — France's feuding leftist parties to their first meeting on Wednesday since their electoral alliance split in September, but reported no progress towards healing the breach.

Senior officials of the Socialist, Communist and Left Radical Parties met at the request of Communist Central Committee secretary Charles Fitermann. He left the meeting saying that he was "profoundly disappointed by the meeting which was in effect totally negative."

A Socialist statement said the party found "with great regret that the Communist leaders are not ready to resume talks without preconditions." No new meeting was scheduled.

Fitermann said the non-

Communist parties "held tenaciously" to their positions which he claimed were a backward step from the joint programme for government they adopted in 1971.

It was argument over how to update the programme before the 1978 general election that led to the split, with the Socialist and Left Radicals not willing to accept Communist demands for the projected nationalization of nine major firms to be extended to over 700 of their named subsidiaries.

Before the split, the alliance generally had been expected to win power in 1978 after 20 years in opposition to the Gaullist-led centre-right majority, but recent polls show a drop from around 54 to 50 per cent of voter support.

'Outside probes' cut FBI's work

WASHINGTON (Reuter). — Federal Bureau of Investigation operations against subversive and extremist groups have dropped sharply following implementation of new intelligence policies, according to a congressional watchdog agency.

A report by the General Accounting Office showed that pending FBI intelligence investigations dropped from nearly 10,000 in mid-1975 to 642 in mid-1977. Between March 1975 and July 1977 the number of special agents involved in domestic intelligence dropped from 788 to 143. The decline, the report said, was attributable to a lack of militant activity by protest groups and the implementation of guidelines and investigative policies by the Justice Department and the FBI.

The report also cited as a factor "outside inquiries" into the FBI's intelligence operations. "Past discharges of FBI intelligence abuses while the late J. Edgar Hoover was directed to widespread calls for reform."

Buddhists who resisted Saigon say Hanoi turns on them

PARIS (Reuter). — Vietnam's largest Buddhist movement has just smuggled one of its top leaders out of the country to launch a world-wide campaign against alleged religious persecution in Vietnam.

"The venerable Thich Man Giac, who escaped from Vietnam by boat, is a leader of the Unified Buddhist Church — which throughout the Vietnam war spearheaded Buddhist opposition to the pro-American governments of the now-defunct Republic of South Vietnam.

The movement's headquarters is the famed An Quang Pagoda in Ho Chi Minh City (formerly Saigon), from which many demonstrations which toppled South Vietnamese cabinets were launched. From the pagoda monks went forth to burn themselves alive in protest demonstrations during the 1960s.

The Rev. Thich told newsmen in Paris this week that he was placed in charge of the Buddhist liaison office when the Communists took over in the South. And, "since the day of liberation, Buddhists in Vietnam have done their utmost to cooperate with the revolutionary government," he said.

"But the new regime is pursuing a policy of shattering the religious communities of our country and has arrested hundreds of monks, confiscated hundreds of pagodas and converted them to government administration buildings, removed and smashed Buddhist statues and prohibited the celebration of Buddha's birthday as a national holiday," he charged.

The Rev. Thich produced a sheet of letters sent by Buddhist leaders to Vietnamese Prime Minister Pham Van Dong which he said went unanswered. He added that middle-rank officials of the new government were often corrupt and were perhaps taking actions affecting the Buddhists which were not ordered by the Hanoi authorities.

The Buddhist leader said his movement "did not want political power...but asked for tolerance and the right to participate in the task of building life, not as machines but as humans with minds and hearts."

Nobody was immediately available at the Vietnamese Embassy in Paris to comment on his remarks. But foreign sources within Vietnam said last month that they believed government policy towards the Buddhists was motivated not by anti-religious feelings but by the desire to break "a power within the country which could have as much influence as the government itself."

On November 1, Carter signed a $4.7b. foreign aid package that earmarks $1.5b. in military and economic aid to Israel.

"Limitation of military aid to Israel could become a real means of influencing Tel Aviv, which does not want to heed the voice of reason," the "Pravda" commentator wrote.

Kolesnichenko claimed that "Washington's obvious concession to local Zionists and Tel Aviv aroused serious anxiety of American opinion, which regards this demonstrative gesture as dangerous and untimely."

He said Carter's signature on the bill proves the Administration says it is pursuing one foreign-policy course, but actually follows another.

Writing in the Communist Party daily "Pravda," New York correspondent Thomas Kolesnichenko said Carter could have sent a firm message to Tel Aviv by cutting the amount of foreign aid.

"Limitation of military aid to Israel could become a real means of influencing Tel Aviv, which does not want to heed the voice of reason," the "Pravda" commentator wrote.

Kolesnichenko claimed that "Washington's obvious concession to local Zionists and Tel Aviv aroused serious anxiety of American opinion, which regards this demonstrative gesture as dangerous and untimely."

He said Carter's signature on the bill proves the Administration says it is pursuing one foreign-policy course, but actually follows another.

Writing in the Communist Party daily "Pravda," New York correspondent Thomas Kolesnichenko said Carter could have sent a firm message to Tel Aviv by cutting the amount of foreign aid.

On November 1, Carter signed a $4.7b. foreign aid package that earmarks $1.5b. in military and economic aid to Israel.

"Limitation of military aid to Israel could become a real means of influencing Tel Aviv, which does not want to heed the voice of reason," the "Pravda" commentator wrote.

S. Africa kills 10 guerrillas near border

WINDHOEK, South West Africa (UPI). — South African forces killed 10 black guerrillas in clashes near the Angolan border during the last two days, a defence headquarters statement said yesterday.

A statement from the South West African (Namibian) command said its troops drew "unprovoked fire from terrorist mortars in Angola" in the past two days.

The South African side suffered no losses during this week's clashes in the escalating campaign for black independence in the disputed territory administered by Pretoria.

Two separate incidents were reported. In the first, on Wednesday morning, a security patrol was fired on with mortars from Angola. The fire was returned. There were no losses to the security forces.

In the second incident yesterday morning, a security force observed a group of terrorists north of the border and kept them under observation. After dark, the security force moved their position and at 2:45 a.m., the terrorists opened fire with mortars on the security force's previous position. The security force returned the fire. Again, there were no losses to the security forces, the statement said.

Liquid protein diet can a killer, U.S. official says

WASHINGTON (Reuter). — Sixteen persons have died trying to lose weight by taking liquid protein pills as "the last-chance diet," the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) said on Wednesday.

A number of other people had become severely ill. FDA Commissioner Donald Kennedy told a news conference as he warned about the dangers of the extreme low-calorie, high-protein diet.

He said the liquid protein diets could be extremely hazardous for some people and present a health problem "of serious proportions."

The fatal cases involved people who took the liquid protein pills for other nutritional problems, Kennedy said.

The commissioner said victims were obese women 25 and 44 who lost an average of 100 pounds (45 kilos) after liquid protein diets for periods.

"All died sudden previous symptoms irregularities — either diet or shortly after got said."

SINIAVSKY: STARTING FROM SCRATCH

By EMMANUEL PRATT
Special to The Jerusalem Post

"I REALLY don't care under what regime I live — be it Fascist, Communist, Socialist, democratic, or any other — so long as people there are free and don't get hungry." The voice of Andrei Donatovich Siniaevsky is as soft as his handshake, as his glance, as his blue Russian shirt over his soft, grey slacks. During my two-hour interview with him I never saw a smile under his broad beard. But it must be soft, too, I am sure.

Looking at Siniaevsky I could not but think of Ivan Karatayev, the peasant hero-anti-hero in Tolstoy's War and Peace. What happens to such a man when suddenly he is torn off his native, Russian soil — rocky as it may be — and has to start a new life from scratch? In Paris. Among Parisians.

Nothing seems to have happened to him. Karatayev remains Karatayev. Siniaevsky remained Siniaevsky even after the Soviets let him out of Russia and locked the iron gates behind him for ever.

"Yes, this is the first time I am out of Russia," he says slowly inhaling his cigarette. "Of course there were problems. But they were purely technical. Contacts with people. Getting used to the new audience (I still don't speak French, you know)."

AND YET he chose to settle in France because he was attracted by the French culture which he abhors in Russia. In Russian translation of French philosophers, writers, poets, in looking at the reproductions of French art. Now he sees it all in the original.

"I don't think I could be as comfortable in the U.S.," says Siniaevsky, "apart from the fact that I have some old friends here with whom I corresponded for many years. And then, Sorbonne invited me to lecture on the culture of ancient Russia, the Russian novel, and the modern Soviet poets, Tsvetayeva, Mayakovsky and Yezhov.

Of course he misses Russia. But he still keeps in contact with friends there. Writes to them. Talks to them on the phone. He met some of them during his just concluded month's stay in Israel. There were many warm, friendly meetings and talks about the "old days in the concentration camps in Mordovia where he spent five years (out of nine, given him for publishing his critical articles outside of Russia)."

He came to Israel at the invitation of Jerusalem Mayor Teddy Kollek, to stay at the Mikhkenot Sha'ananim VIP hostel and relax. But relax he didn't: the schedule was much too thick, places to see — too many, impact — too strong. What is the overall impression of all this? "The most amazing intertwining of so many languages and civilizations into one national pattern."

SINIAEVSKY'S definitions (we spoke in Russian) are precise, short, quickly formulated, even when he evades issues.

One issue he does evade is his controversy with Solzhenitsyn on the one hand and the Russian migrant intellectuals in Paris on the other:

"When I came to Paris the Russian emigrant intelligentsia received me with warm enthusiasm. They used to come to my lectures. Many contacted me. But soon our mutual lack of understanding emerged."

"We spoke Russian, but it seemed that we spoke different languages. We were of different generations, of different experience. They are still very naive. They are detached from reality. They have a terribly conservative taste. For them, history stopped in 1917. And now it may be too late for them to jump over the gap which they themselves created."

"Were't they slightly shocked by your Jewish nom de plume, Abram Terz?" I asked. (Siniaevsky still does not smile: "Perhaps, somewhat. But they do not know that Abram Terz is a name well known in the Odessa underworld folklore. This is where I got it. To me it is acceptable, psychologically and stylistically. It does not sound heroic or noble and beautiful. It is a full-blooded name. He is an Odessa thief and a Jew. A man persecuted and laughed at."

However, it's not Abram Terz that stands between me and the Russian emigrant intelligentsia. It is my criticism of Pushkin, Gogol and Dostoyevsky that made them so antagonistic to me. I love these giants of Russian literature, but they (the emigrants in Paris), consider my writings a sacrilege. Because I take them down from their stone pedestals and show them as human beings with all their human traits. You see these two paintings?"

Siniaevsky points at a gorgeous 19th century portrait of Moses Montefiore in a golden frame and then to a modern, bright contemporary abstract and says: "For them the portrait of this gentleman is acceptable, while this picture is a sacrilege."

"Your controversy with Alexander Solzhenitsyn is of a different nature, I presume."

Siniaevsky replies immediately. His formula seems to be ready: "I cannot support such Russian nationalism in state problems. I cannot support isolationism. I am not a moralist or a preacher with certain dictatorial inclinations. I am repulsed by it."

"What is your political inclination?" "I do not consider myself either a political activist or a political writer. I really don't care under what regime I live, so long as people there are free and don't go hungry."

"What is the relationship between the Russian dissidents in the Soviet Union and the Jewish fighters for emigration to Israel?"

"The relationship is very close. The Russian dissidents defend human rights, and one of the basic human rights is the right to live where one wants to live. There are many — Voronel, for instance — who are both Russian dissidents and fighters for emigration to Israel."

Here Siniaevsky sounds a warning: "The Russian dissidents now are in a very difficult situation. The government campaign against them gains momentum and we expect new trials and repercussions. But they will not be uprooted. The process of thinking continues."

"I understand you had to interrupt your vacation in Israel to go to Norway."

"Yes, I received there this year's Prize for Freedom of the International organization Libertas."

His personal plans for the future are clear: "I am now writing a novel. No, I cannot give any details. And a group of writers in Paris intends issuing a new literary quarterly, 'Syntax.' I shall be writing there."

"Do you think you will ever go back to Russia?"

"No. After a long pause: 'No, I don't think so...'" that his statement would "stun Israelis," Egyptian President Anwar Sadat declared that he was "ready to go to the Knesset" negotiations. The comment caught the imagination of graphic Alex Berlyne, who produced the photo-montage above.

Siniaevsky's handshake is as soft as his voice.

YORK — Late one night galloped, white-haired and from Mauritius, Radha Ramphul, found himself in his hands and knees, crawling on the floor of U.S. Ambassador Andrew Young's apartment.

He was playing cowboys on the floor. Ramphul recalls with a chuckle that night over white however, the two envoys talk out serious things as well, kind of informal exchange. "Yes Ramphul, 'can be very intimate'."

er, faced with the shocked of Congress Party politicians.

Wooing the Third World with a casual air

In his 10 months at the UN, Ambassador Andrew Young has the U.S., writes MILTON R. BENJAMIN.

The U.S. has more friends all over the world than ever before.

THAT IS NOT to say that Andrew Young gets uniformly high marks for his first 10 months in diplomacy. His casual, some say "happy-go-lucky" style may appeal to much of the Third World, but it grates on the nerves of career envoys of America's more protocol-conscious European allies.

Even Africans express exasperation over Young's "preconceived ideas" about their continent, and are particularly distressed by his con- tain "style" in his days in America's civil rights movement.

"I have told him on a number of occasions, you cannot compare the experiences of the civil rights movement in Atlanta with the experiences in South Africa," sighs Tanzania's Ambassador Salim.

BUT MOST of Young's critics concede that his performance has been improving across the board in recent months.

(AP wirephoto)

"Obviously, he's learning," says Nigeria's Harriman. "I notice that these days, he's more careful about his pronouncements. He reads his statements carefully."

Beyond that, Third World ambassadors keep coming back to the matter of style. Andy Young, they say repeatedly, is not an "Ivory tower" ambassador. Whatever his other pluses or minuses, Young has courted tiny countries that never had so much as a nod in the hallway from a U.S. envoy before — and it clearly matters.

Within hours of being sworn in as UN ambassador, in fact, Young was on his way to the Organization of African Unity's office in New York to meet a group of six African envoys.

It was the first time that an American envoy had ever come to them.

"That may not sound important, but it was very important for the people of Africa," says Quattara. "Moyinhan never came to see us. We used to get to see the No. 2 or the No. 3 man from the U.S. mission."

previously been virtually ignored.

Mfanafuli Makatini, UN representative of the African National Congress, says he had tried unsuccessfully for years to talk to U.S. ambassadors. The closest he came to making contact was a handshake in a UN corridor. "I had more or less given up," Makatini says.

At 5 o'clock one morning recently, Makatini found himself seated at the U.S. ambassador's breakfast table, having a plate of ham and eggs with Young and his family. Observe Makatini: "It's a fresh development."

NIGERIA'S Harriman says that after Young visited three African resolutions last week that called for sweeping economic as well as military sanctions against South Africa, people asked him: "Were't you shocked to see Andrew Young raise his hand to cast those votes?"

"We're not such fools," Harriman responds angrily. "Andrew Young might be black, but Andrew Young cannot act except within the framework of the foreign policy of his country."

But while Young may not make policy, most of his colleagues at the UN believe he strongly influences it — an impression Young fosters with frequent conversational reference to his relationship with President Jimmy Carter.

BUT HAS Young's detente with the Third World — a dramatic change from the days when U.S. am- bassadors were taking the floor in the UN to denounce the "tyranny of the majority" — actually made a difference on any votes? Many delegates say the answer is "yes."

"This final resolution imposing the arms embargo on South Africa," says the OAU's Quattara. "We don't like it. But Andy Young did his best. We let it go because of the general effort which has been deployed by people like Andy Young."

"But with the gentle words of Andrew Young," says Harriman, "many of us were able to persuade our friends, 'Why should we be awkward about things like this?'"

SOME THIRD World delegates, however, have mixed feelings about the warm new relationship with America's UN envoy.

"We Africans tend to be sentimental about brotherhood," says the African National Congress's Makatini. "Young gets away with a bribe of a lot more than Moyinhan could ever get away with."

Makatini cited Young's statement a week ago favoring continued U.S. nuclear cooperation with South Africa, adding: "If that statement had been made by Moyinhan, the Africans would have been up in arms."

India's persecuted untouchables hastily amended the defence to explain: "I termed it natural human behaviour because human behaviour can be both good and bad."

But Joshi's unthinking callousness only too tragically highlights elitist India's disregard of about 90 million of the Janata Party chief minister people who are born beyond the pale of Hinduism's exclusive castes and are therefore regarded as unclean in a ritualistic sense.

"Untouchability is abolished and its practice in any form is forbidden," proudly proclaims India's republican constitution which was adopted in 1950. The meaninglessness of that mockingly empty affirmation was exposed 27 years later, when Prime Minister Morarji Desai recently promised that there would be no Untouchables by 1982.

MEANWHILE, reports from Bihar, Uttar Pradesh, Orissa, Tamil Nadu, Andhra Pradesh — from all the orthodox agricultural states, in fact — suggest that Harijans are still victims of cruel persecution. A 30-year-old Harijan was beaten to death with staves in Orissa when caught stealing yams; high-caste Andhra Pradesh villagers have imposed a $3.50 fine on anyone who dares talk to society's outcasts; in Tamil Nadu, Harijans are treated as slaves.

Elsewhere, they are refused living wages, denied access to temples and even municipal roads and parks, not allowed to draw water from village wells.

BUT IT WOULD be a simplification to see the problem only in terms of religious stratification. It has social, economic and political overtones which defy solution.

For 30 years, successive Congress regimes have lavished special favours on Harijans — money grants, free education and earmarked jobs — which has created a vested interest in backwardness. The Congress Party's only interest lay in votes. These were guaranteed by a bunch of cynical Harijan leaders, who supported the ruling party in exchange for the lucrative privileges which they kept for themselves.

The rich peasant is the most important feature of the Janata Party's power base. Moreover, Home Minister Charan Singh, the strong man in the New Delhi cabinet, is a firm defender of the rights of the rural rich.

Singh's own constituency of Meerut is notorious for its caste crimes; the Communists claim that a 13-year-old Harijan girl was raped and murdered there in September. YET THE recrudescence of conflict is in itself a hopeful sign. The Harijan is no longer prepared passively to submit to his house being burned down, his crops looted, his sons drowned in petrol and burned alive and his wife raped before his eyes. Intensifying high caste violence could also be the backlash of a class that feels it is at bay.

A simple change in nomenclature, as for instance when Mahatma Gandhi decreed that Untouchables should be known as Harijans or Children of God, is not enough. A Harijan remains as untouchable as before. The stigma of caste follows even those who seek refuge in the enlightenment of Buddhism.

Hence the recent murmuring of protest, an insistence on human dignity and citizenship rights. Maharashtra Harijans were some years ago inspired by the American Black Panther movement to form a militant group of their own called the Dalit Panthers. Armed Harijans in Bihar took to Naxalite (Marxist) terrorism even during Mrs. Gandhi's repressive emergency.

Both movements were suppressed, but they offered a glimpse into the awesome shape of things to come. Morarji Desai has already been warned that unless he takes immediate steps to ensure equality, he will have a civil war on his hands. (Otas)

Bringing the Holy Land home

CHRISTMAS will come early for Johnny Cash. It will be a very special one but it will be given the ideal possible public exposure — a coast-to-coast U.S. television.

Cash and his sister, June Carter, led an entourage of 21 persons to Israel, spending 10 days of sightseeing and of shooting background scenes in Bethlehem and Galilee for a Christmas special to be aired over CBS-TV on November 30.

He took time out between takes for 15-minute chat with Prime Minister Menachem Begin, and according to a spokesman who was present, couldn't get a word in edgewise. He stopped, too, at an orphanage, where he sang to the children.

"I feel as good as a Gentile can feel the City of Jerusalem," Cash said. Much of the singing for the Christmas special is being done at the Grand Ole Opryhouse in Nashville, Tennessee, the American capital of country and Western music. The line shot here will be a backdrop for the songs.

"I wanted to do a Christmas special with my friends and family," said Cash, born to a cotton farmer in Highlands, Arkansas. He now lives 28 kms from Nashville and winters in Jamaica, where he owns a 17th century home.

The friends who will be singing with Cash and his wife, who is a distant relative of President Carter, are among the superstars of Country and Western music. They include Roy Clark, Roy Orbison, Carl Perkins and the Statler Brothers. The songs will be a mixture of Christmas carols and a bit of Americana — Gene Autry's "Back in the Saddle" among them. There will be one in memory of Elvis Presley, too: "This Train is Bound for Glory."

Cash will recall in the special his previous trips to Israel in 1968 and 1971. The second time he was here he made a movie, "Gospel Road," that was bought by 20th Century-Fox and sold to World Wide Pictures of Burbank, California. It is part of evangelist Billy Graham's organization.

The film now is in distribution in 500 churches throughout America, giving Cash a bit of a reputation as an evangelist.

He is not an evangelist, despite his strong religious feelings and faith in his Protestantism that pulled him through the worst period of his life when he was lost in a foggy world of alcohol, barbiturates and amphetamines. Now he drinks ice tea at least a year.

Cash spent a year making "Gospel Road," a project he seems to view as having repaid a debt to his religion for getting him through the worst time. "I would like to be remembered for it," Cash said of the film. "I can't call what I do evangelism except for 'Gospel Road,' and then only after it was taken out of my hands."

Cash is 45 and looks older, despite the lack of gray in his dark hair. The age is in his brown eyes, on his lined face. The sensitivity that he projects in his songs, many of them written by himself, comes through in conversation and belies the tough, truck-driver image he assumes by wearing all black.

The deep voice for which he is renowned is the same in conversation as it is in song. He is soft spoken and in dealing with strangers as is as gracious as a blue-blooded aristocrat. He has a knack for remembering names.

His sensitivity is reflected in his impression of a visit to Masada. "Masada was the most stirring, inspiring thing I've ever seen," he said. (UPI)

LAURICE KAHAN of Paris was sitting in the lobby of the Tel Aviv Hilton one evening shortly after the six day war when he overheard someone say a piano was needed for the performance Yaffa Yarkoni was to give for wounded soldiers at Tel Hashomer that evening. Apologizing for eavesdropping, he offered to provide the piano.

By the time he returned home, he had other ideas of how he and his friends could help wounded soldiers. He went to Keren Or, an organization now celebrating its 25th anniversary.

For the occasion, Kahan has brought 100 members, supporters and friends of Keren Or to Israel so that they can see for themselves that their money and fund-raising efforts have done good.

This week, they dedicated a sports hall at an army base and a sports field in Sinai and laid the cornerstone for a cultural centre at Be'er Sheva.

Initially, Kahan thought of inviting troops of wounded soldiers to France for a holiday. With the help of friends, he brought over the first group of 25, mostly amputees, in 1967. Over the years until the Yom Kippur War many more groups followed.

"After the war, General Herzl Shafir, who was then head of the manpower department, told us that other countries were following our example and that we could help in her soul had instantly re-entered life — at Ivy's birth.

The Templetons, fearful for their daughter's safety, turn to a Jewish lawyer friend, who offers little consolation, as he reveals his grand father's wild tales of the Gypsies. Hoover is brought to trial on a charge of having kidnapped Ivy in an unprecedented court case.

Directed by Robert Wise this well-made film is almost entirely free of gimmicks. Its strength and purpose lies in its acceptance of reincarnation. After a shaky beginning, Marsha Mason and Susan Swift develop strong and moving performances, while respected British actor, Anthony Hopkins, with his gentle voice and mystical expression, is beautifully convincing as the father of Audrey Rose.

LAST CANNIBAL WORLD (Fear, Tel Aviv) Starring Massimo Fusco. Directed by Massimo Fusco. Based on a novel by YVES KAGAN, this film is not for you nor for your children. This is no Tarzan adventure. It is a true story.

In 1975 Robert Harper, an American executive, flew into the Pacific island of Mindanao to inspect a research outpost in the jungle. The camp was deserted. He and his companions found the remains of a stone-age tribe of cannibals. Harper, alone, survived the most grotesque and horrible ordeals. Intent on authenticity, Italian director Ruggero Deodato took his actors, film crew and a military detachment back to the same spot among the cannibals to reconstruct these horrendous events.

His camera penetrates the cave-home and way of life of the tribe, capturing on film their weapons, ceremonies, sexual habits, cruel rituals and an act of cannibalism. Where he does not actually experience, he convincingly simulates — as in the birth of a female child at the river's edge, tossed by his mother into the current for crocodile.

Massimo Fusco, as Harper, does a splendid job. He is obviously demanding, unorthodox, and un-learned. Dialogue is minimal; the jungle is alive; and there are some amazing scenes, sickening in their primitiveness, remarkable in their filming.

Nuggets from demographic studies

JEWISH SCENE / Geoffrey Wigoder

ALTHOUGH DEMOGRAPHIC studies hardly constitute the most enthralling reading for laymen, careful reading can produce material not only of intrinsic interest, but basic to studies in many other fields.

"Paper 1a Jewish Demography 1973" which has just been published by the Hebrew University's Institute of Contemporary Jewry, but is based on papers delivered at the Congress of Jewish Studies four years ago, contains valuable contributions under the editorship of U.O. Schmied, P. Gilson and S. Della Pergola. Here are a few selections from its broad range of subjects.

SWITZERLAND: During World War II, 23,000 Jewish refugees found sanctuary in Switzerland, their numbers at the time exceeding those of the local population. After the war, they were not permitted to remain with the exception of 2,000 elderly. Since the war, some Jewish refugees (from Hungary in 1956 and from Czechoslovakia in 1968) were allowed to settle permanently, and a number of North African Jews have made their homes there since the 1960s.

This immigration has been small, but sufficient to check the natural decline in the Jewish population. In fact, for the last 50 years (apart from the war period), the number of Jews in Switzerland has remained between 18,000-21,000.

The influx, however, has come to a stop. Public opinion has been demanding that there be no further increase in the proportion of foreigners in the Swiss population, and restrictions on all immigration have been severely tightened.

The community is highly urbanized with 84 per cent of the Jews in cities. It is also rapidly ageing; there are few young people and over half the Jewish women in the country are past child-bearing age. The out-marriage rate has risen sharply, and this poses a serious threat to Jewish survival there. Over the past generation the percentage of Jews marrying a non-Jewish partner has risen from 32 to 41. Every third Jewish woman and every second man marry out of the faith.

The Jews in Switzerland are well educated, mostly middle class and are not particularly prominent in the economy. They do not dominate any single branch of business. They are neither conspicuous among the intelligentsia nor are they numerous in the liberal professions. In every respect they maintain a low profile. (From the study by Kurt B. Mayer of Berne.)

SOUTH AFRICA: No less than 88.8 per cent of South Africa's Jews are urban dwellers. Compared with the general urban population, Jews are highly over-represented in the professional, administrative and sales occupations and grossly under-represented in blue collar jobs (production workers). The pattern is very similar to that of Jews in the U.S.

Many Jewish university students are taking general arts degrees, which have no practical objective, and a considerable number drop out without taking degrees. It is not as easy to enter the family business as previously. Many such businesses have become public companies, precluding automatic family succession.

In industry, Jews are strongly represented in commerce and finance, less strongly in manufacturing and services (including some of the professions) and highly under-represented in construction, electricity, transport and mining. Throughout the economy, there is a higher proportion of employers among Jews than in the white population as a whole. (From a paper by Mervyn Cohen and Allic A. Dubb.)

UNITED STATES: A major nationwide survey asked Jewish Untitled acrylic landscape by Bela Shurek from her exhibition at Nahmani's Gallery in Haifa.

ED SARNOFF is a very good woodcut artist; aside the clearly drawn, detailed "Adam's Bar" (from a series of bar scenes), "Dock Street" and "Under the Bridges." The heavy technique dictated by the medium, which is a Bohemianism, but sets its mark on the bizarre, hand-drawn figures of "Merry-Go-Round II." There are a few abstract paintings, the best of which is "Rain at Arbel" (watercolour and wash). The woodcut influence must partly account for the self-conscious myriads of the main paintings. On stylistic grounds alone, one selects the oil pastels, such as 17, 18 and 19. (The New Gallery, Abba Khouvali Community Centre, Haifa). Till Nov. 10.

HAIFA ART NOTES
Ephraim Harris

The interior form like a cocoon — in short, maximum expression through minimal means.

An excellent example is 3: three long, spaced, wires rise and curve on the right of a marble mast, while three short ones act similarly on its lower left, proportions, symmetry and positioning create a perfect static axis. The uneven, bunched iron rods, "Space 7" (7), suggest a sheaf of spears, thrust upwards by their unequal extremities; an impression of flight into the air is created.

Although his sculptures are abstract, it is clear that Green often thinks in botanical terms. Take 4: stainless steel rods turned upwards and set beside an equivalent number of loag, vertical wires; this is obviously a plant of some sort. On the same aesthetic level as 3 is "Opus 2/2" (18): cast stainless steel wires turt around a wooden mast as if a ball-opened sail had been caught in the wind. This is sculpture at its liveliest (Tzella Auditorium, Haifa). Till Nov. 15.

DINAH GIDON is an impressionist in soft colours, but her most successful piece, a pronounced harmonies, is the balcony with armchair. MEIR BALASHA extends from realism to abstraction and possibly his best work reflects the complete absorption of representation into abstraction. One should see JOSEPH ZDROJEVITCH's expressionist works in his present Beit Chagall exhibition, because the Rothschild Gallery doesn't give one the space needed to decipher their content (Rothschild Gallery, Haifa).

FRATERNALLY OURS

MARK SEGAL talks to visiting here for this week's Histadrut trade union leaders, who came convention.

OTTO KERSTEN, secretary-general of the 30 million strong International Confederation of Free Trade Unions (ICFTU), praises the Israeli decision not to follow the U.S. out of the International Labour Organisation. The position of the Government and the Histadrut is that, since there is no alternative to the ILO, it is best to fight from within. Kersten notes that the ILO is the only UN agency in which an Israeli — the Histadrut's Gideon Ben-Israel — serves on its governing body. Ben-Israel was elected on the ICFTU slate.

Because the ILO is the only organization with this machinery to follow up the violation of human and trade union rights, it should not be abandoned to "an unholy alliance of Communists, Fascists and reactionaries," he says. The ICFTU wants to join forces with all democratic elements in the organization in order to counter these trends.

Kersten regrets that détente has not yet reached the ILO. He agrees with the analysis of the U.S. delegation, but not with its drastic decision to walk out. Obviously, the ILO should deal with social problems and not with irrelevant political issues, he stresses, adding the hope that the U.S. will shortly review its position and return to the organization.

A great friend of Israel and a frequent visitor here, the 49-year-old labour leader warns that should the Arab states try anything so extreme as seeking Israel's expulsion, the ICFTU — which controls 12 of the 38 seats in the ILO governing body — would mobilize many other countries to leave too.

Kersten would also like to see the U.S. back in the ICFTU, which it left in 1950. He has been invited to the American Labour Federation AFL-CIO convention in Los Angeles next month, when the issue of rejoining the ICFTU will come up.

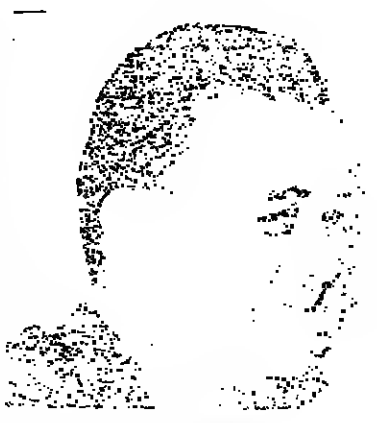

WHEN ASKED about world labour's attitude to the Likud Government, Kersten says that they respect the outcome of democratic elections. But, he continues, "we expect conservative governments to respect the social infrastructure and trade union rights. I would like to advise your government that the introduction of compulsory arbitration for labour disputes is in direct contradiction of Covenant 88 of the ILO."

The Labour leader caused quite a stir when he raised this matter during a TV interview in Australia, which he visited just before coming here. "We took a position, before Milton Friedman came to Israel, against his monetarist theories. In our modern democracies we have to take into account, more than ever before, the basic needs and social consequences of economic policies."

The ICFTU fears that ideas such as Friedman's would undermine the social character of trade unions, which are already threatened by bureaucratically-run, centralized economies.

Would trade unions also wish to fight terrorism and hijacking, and Kersten mentions an impending meeting with IFALPA, the pilots' union. The UN General Assembly condemnation of hijacking was hardly hindering, he notes, and the unions must seek to protect people. Trade unions in each country will now demand proper airport security arrangements similar to those in Israel, West Germany, Britain and the U.S.

Asked for his impressions of the stormy opening session of the Histadrut convention, Kersten says: "It could be said to be the product of democracy. I think, in this case, it was overdue, especially at an opening session and the way the President of your State was insulted. I have never seen such a performance in my many years of trade union experience. I fear that such behaviour may indicate a situation where the Histadrut will be weakened by the behaviour of its own right-wing."

GLENN E. WATTS is vice-president of the AFL-CIO. He headed its fraternal delegation to the Histadrut convention, as a demonstration of U.S. labour's solidarity with Israeli labour and support for Israel. This was underlined by the presence of a delegation from the United Automobile Workers of America, and a sizeable contingent from COPE, the political arm of the American trade union movement. The amiable, 58-year-old Watts is president of the 600,000-strong Communications Workers of America.

Born in South Carolina, Watts is said to have been among the first labour leaders to believe in Jimmy Carter's presidential prospects; he subsequently helped to deliver the labour vote.

Watts' warm identification with Israel's cause is on record. He is one of the most internationally minded AFL-CIO leaders — he opposed leaving the ILO, is happy that Israel is staying in, and is for rejoining the ICFTU. Watts reports that AFL-CIO vice-president Lane Kirkland, slated to succeed his president, George Meany, is as firm a friend of Israel as Meany has proved to be.

What emerges from a talk with Watts is the extent to which the Carter Administration is striving to persuade Israel's friends in Washington of the validity of its policy towards the Jewish State. He had breakfast at the White House just before flying to Jerusalem for the Histadrut convention, and was supplied with a copy of Carter's speech to the World Jewish Congress assembly.

Watts advises both Israel and the U.S. labour movement "to get used to the idea that we have a friend in the White House. I know it's hard to accept (idea), but it's true," he says with a disarming grin. He does not accept the notion that Carter is rushing to get the Geneva conference going at Israel's expense.

Meany's criticism of the joint U.S.-Soviet statement was "a knee-jerk reaction," and his position has "moderated" since. "The present Administration wants to make a big jump to Geneva. They had to bring in the Russians, because they can't go to the conference without them," he explains.

THE AFL-CIO vice-president recently attended a seminar run by Washington's American University, whose president is his old friend Joseph Sisco. The participants included most of the Establishment figures involved in the region and business people. What he heard was: "Israel is stronger now than she was at the beginning of 1976. The Arabs cannot afford a war, but nor can they afford to let things carry on as they are." This, Watts points out, is part of the justification for the Administration's policy — the Arabs cannot sit still for too long. "Thus there must be some movement so that Sadat can sell his ideas to Arab radicals."

Watts feels this view was borne out by the recent remarks of Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan on the need to maintain the diplomatic momentum. However, the labour leader is most unhappy with what Dayan reportedly said about Israel-South Africa relations "being none of America's business." "In that case," he says, "people are going to say there are other things happening to Israel which are none of our business." He warns that South Africa is rapidly becoming a burning issue in America, and UN Ambassador Young's position is enjoying widespread support. This trend must be taken into account by Israel. Watts' friendly advice is that failure to do so "could get Israel into trouble with U.S. public opinion."

MANUEL GARNACHO, 37, is one of the leaders of Spain's socialist trade union federation, the UGT (Union General de Trabajadores). He came here to register his movement's support for Israeli labour. He notes that in a recent debate on Spanish Middle East policy in the Cortes (parliament), the socialist PSOE party — which won 32 per cent of the vote in the first general elections since the Civil War — was the only faction to mention the need for full diplomatic relations with Israel.

The personal trade unionist points out that only this April was his labour movement given an official permit to make public appearances. With Franco's death and the disappearance of the Falangist regime, the old government-sponsored workers' syndicates fell to pieces. The UGT is just beginning to work in the open, and it is encouraged by its progress. Last year, it had 11,000 members; it hopes to have 1,500,000 members by the end of the year. Alongside the socialist party, the UGT is a fighting opposition to the Suarez Government, which, he says, cooperates with the Communist Party and the trade unions for fear of socialist successes at the works committee elections in December and the local elections next spring.

Garnacho is interested in the Histadrut experience with cooperative enterprises, remarking that the cooperative movement is spreading throughout Spain. Moreover, the UGT is now fighting in court for the return of some of its assets, which were confiscated by the Franco regime during the Civil War. What is fascinating, he says, is the extent to which Spanish workers keep faith with their traditional democratic organizations despite the nearly 40-year Falangist hiatus. There was an immediate rallying to the socialist movement as soon as they revived the UGT and the PSOE.

Garnacho is here with Alfonso Echeverria, general secretary of Basque Workers' Union, who sees resemblances between his movement and the Histadrut — both could claim to be labour organizations and movements for national revival. The Basques — Echeverria stresses — do not regard themselves as Spanish. Even the sons of those Spaniards who migrated to the Basque province for its job opportunities have become Basque nationalists.

At this point Garnacho interjects with the information that the Basques were more voted in the Basque province than the nationalists, and support their aspirations for autonomy, but not for separatism. Echeverria concedes it is utopian to aspire to separatism; but they want autonomy as a start, like the Catalans (who recently won theirs from the Central Government in Madrid).

Echeverria says the Basques have sympathy for Israel — apparently, there is an historical bond between their movement and Zionism that goes back to the 1930s.

SOME SPOKESMEN of Oz Veshalom are themselves not free of some of the bad traits they attribute to Gush Emunim. Among these are a claim to exclusive knowledge of how we ought to deal with the territorial question in the light of Jewish tradition, and an occasional distortion of terms and contexts.

(Oz Veshalom, which some people call "the movement for sane Religious Zionism," is a group of former and present members of the National Religious Party who organized themselves about two years ago to oppose the Gush Emunim trend in Religious Zionism.)

A few examples of the tendency are to be found in an article by Uriel Simon, professor of Bible at Bar-Ilan University and a leading Oz Veshalom figure, in the October 25 edition of "Yediot Aharnot." He starts out by taking the Government to task for presenting the problem of Jewish settlement in Samaria as one between us and the U.S., whereas it is "fundamentally one between us and our neighbours."

Of course it is. And I have always thought that it was precisely because of a certain assessment of our relations with our neighbours and because of certain considerations of principle that many of us hold which may be broadly described as the Gush Emunim-Land of Israel Movement-Begin view on the territorial question. Members of Oz Veshalom are free to argue with that assessment and those considerations and conclusions, but they cannot say they do not exist.

As for the U.S., I do not understand how it comes into this as the other party to the dispute. I understand that we are interested in America as the one major power that has not yet placed itself squarely in the opposite camp. Therefore we hope to persuade it of the justice and wisdom of our case so that it may support us where it might count.

Prof. Simon describes our dispute with the Arabs as one between neighbours, each of whom is trying to persuade the judge as to the justice of his own case. (The U.S. is suddenly no longer adversary but judge.) In so doing, he continues, the adversaries forget that whatever the judge rules, the victor must then live with his neighbour and not with the judge. So the adversaries had better not ignore each other's just claims, and ought to try and settle things out of court.

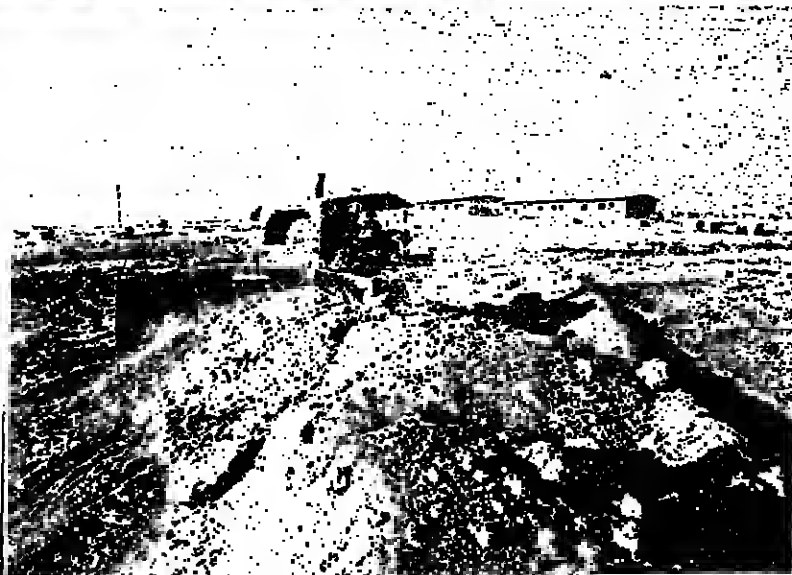

This is a charming analogy, except for its implication of a perfect judge, in the Arab-Jewish dispute. It ignores the heavy weight of history and law in our favour, and it ignores our efforts to meet our neighbours halfway, if not more, since the dispute started to take its form at the time of the Balfour Declaration.

It also ignores the fact that the dispute is no longer just between us and the Palestinian Arabs, with the U.S. sitting as sole judge. The entire "Arab world," nearly all the Moslem countries and most of the "Third World" have joined our neighbours' side in the litigation. What is more, they are in the courtroom not only as co-plaintiffs (or co-defendants), but also as co-judges, along with the many others crowding the bench alongside the U.S.

PROF. SIMON goes on to say that the moral person must bear in mind that the blame in a dispute cannot possibly be entirely on one side. Therefore, we must hear, and give fair consideration to, our adversary's claims.

Beautiful advice. I hope that Oz Veshalom is giving similar advice to our neighbours, among whom there may also be moral persons wishing to know where they have been unfair to the Jews.

To be sure, we have sometimes

Tractor at work at settlement in Samaria.

Messianism and the 'territorial question'

The peace policy of Oz Veshalom, "the movement for sane Religious Zionism," contains the same pseudo-Messianic danger that Oz Veshalom says lies in Gush Emunim's territorial policy, argues MOSHE KOHN.

committed morally wrong acts against the Palestinian Arabs. It would be interesting, however, to compare the extent to which the moral culpability of each of the two sides has been a matter of basic philosophy, strategy and high policy, and to what extent a matter of individual, partisan action. It would also be interesting to compare how each side has dealt with instances of the latter.

Oz Veshalom people generally prefer to discuss the matter of Jewish settlement in Judea-Samaria from the moral and religious rather than the political-security standpoint. This because, as Prof. Simon puts it, "for the religious Jew, every dispute — private or national — is also a matter between him and his Maker." Such a Jew must therefore be sure that his actions are in keeping with God's requirements of him, his keeping with "the Torah way," as he calls it, the appropriate scale of values. He is afraid, however, that in doing so he lays himself open to accusations of "fanatical idealism," "Arab-lover," "self-hater," and the like.

We Jews, he says, tend to employ such epithets against fellow Jews "who concede that the Palestinians have a national right in part of Eretz Yisrael."

Indeed, some nationalist extremists tend to do so, just as some universalist extremists like to hurl such epithets as stupid, chauvinist, millarist. But I do not remember that the overwhelming majority of the people ever adopted this tone against many leaders of the pre-State Zionist Movement and of the Religious Zionist Movement and of the non-Zionist Agudat Yisrael, who over the decades have advocated compromise with the Arabs in Eretz Yisrael, including an Arab state.

However, even less extreme persons may find it difficult to restrain themselves when they hear someone speaking as though we are the main perpetrators of injustice and only mentioning in passing that the Arabs, too, may be ever so slightly to blame.

Again and again, Prof. Simon suggests that the Arab "No" to us is basically a reaction to evils we have done to them. Few people among our arch-doves — two notable exceptions are Arie Eliaz and Amos Kenan — have ever dwelt on the fact that our "hard line" of recent years may be basically a response to our neighbours' actions over the decades. Still fewer have noted that these actions seem to be in keeping with the traditional attitude of Islamism-Arabism to Judaism and Jewry, and are not merely a recently developed reaction to "Zionist expansionism."

So, according to these people, Jewish settlement in Judea-Samaria is ipso facto "provocative." How many reminders do they need that our neighbours were "provoked" by our very appearance in "the Arab world" as a sovereign people; provoked even before 1948, by our presence here as a people aspiring to sovereignty? Our neighbours were offended by our very aspiration to equal first-class citizenship with them in a cantonal state, a bi-national state, a federative state — in any one of the various compromise Palestinian (the term then referred also, perhaps primarily, to the Jews) states that various authorities and private individuals suggested before 1948.

URIEL SIMON is sure that a majority of us "are ready... to agree to territorial compromise in Judea and Samaria." I am sure he is right, and I count myself among that majority. However, he finds that our readiness for compromise is flawed by the fact that it stems "solely and exclusively from a sense of lack of alternative; not, Heaven forbid, from a free recognition of our fellows' right, but solely from submission to Great Power pressure."

I should like to know: what morality requires us to solve the Palestinian Arabs' national problem in our homeland, at great risk to our individual lives and to our national life, in view of the entire history of their management of their side of the dispute?

Jewish settlement in Judea-Samaria "makes the possibility of peace more remote," Oz Veshalom and others say. But all Jewish settlement, in any part of Eretz Yisrael, since the beginning of Zionist settlement has made that possibility more remote. Fortunately, the Zionist "founding fathers" concerned themselves more with solving the Jewish national problem than the Arab national problem. Otherwise, there would be no State of Israel today.

Secondly, the Arabs having reacted to us as they did, how do our doves — religious and others — know that more massive settlement in the last 100 years, and even immediately after the 1967 war, would not have speeded peace? How do they know that even today a great Jewish national resurgence, in Israel and in the Diaspora, expressed by a large-scale aliyah and by large-scale settlement wherever in Eretz Yisrael it can be accomplished without directly and forcibly displacing people, would not bring the Arabs and the rest of the world to their senses and speed peace?

THE PEOPLE of Oz Veshalom rightly note the difference between the views of Rabbi Zvi Yehuda Kook and his Gush Emunim followers, on the one hand, and that of people Rabbi Joseph B. Solovevitch on territorial question.

The former believe that we are prepared to die rather than up any part of Eretz Yisrael. Latter maintain that the territorial question is a matter of life and death. Therefore, just as in health we consult doctors before giving Halacha decision about dishevelled with Sabbath or Kashrut law order to save a person's life, political-security matters we first consult the political military experts.

Since there are at least Halachic views here, Prof. Simon says, the territorial question "open one."

Correct. And some of politicians and generals believe we should have got out of Samaria and all the rest long ago. In fact, some of them believe we had followed their advice the outset, we could have achieved the Zionist aims without losing the goodwill of neighbours.

But they tried their way, in less, for nearly 60 years, and did not come. Not because they were wicked. On the contrary, they perhaps not wicked enough.

Peace would have come enough if from the beginning a deal with our Palestinian neighbours as our ancestors were come to deal with their Amalekites as morose problems; as the Iraqis with their Assyrian problem; die and Pakistan deal with respective Moslem and problems in 1947-48; as the Poles Russians deal with their German problem after 1945; Mon Khmer are dealing with Cambodian problem — the long.

For all the condemnation have been rained on us for outrages some of us did against Arabs in 1948 and 1967 the outrages that none of us committed, we might as well do what the "family of us" has been accustomed to do in similar situations and getting with it, and getting "peace."

Our leaders in all the years this year's elections did not intend to do it. What they intend to do, as I understand it, is to let Rabbi Solovevitch's view of Rabbi Kook's. It is based on Jewish history and tradition claims, and pragmatic geopolitics considerations some Gush Emunim.

It is, indeed, an open question whether there isn't a greater to our individual lives and national life in the Oz Veshalom approach than in that of the Government. It is an open question whether the latter approach not long ago have brought us and whether it might still be as close to peace than the advocated by Oz Veshalom are pursued by our pre governments.

LIKE OTHER members of his movement, Prof. Simon quotes extol from the Jewish sources how much God cherishes people wishes us to pursue it. They do, at least, that it teaches "Peace now, and price," just as some Gush Emunim quote from the source that implies "Territory and at any price." Does not peace policy contain the danger that Oz Veshalom may say lies in Rabbi Kook's territorial policy — the danger of Messianism that will lead us to brink?

It is an open question. Some politicians and generals have answered in its essence that has been tried, and it has not brought us peace. Others politicians and generals are giving another answer. Let's try.

Strong Point!

Our household insurance specialist actually looks for weak points when he starts dealing with a new household insurance or business insurance policy. The fine eye of our household insurance specialist has learned by experience which are the weak points and how to protect them. This is the strong-point of our household insurance specialist, and that is why many of our new policy holders immediately acquire a feeling of greater security after they have carried out the suggestions of our specialist.

At GOSHEN — we just do not sell insurance — we are interested in providing total security, and in this manner providing the lowest rates available and prompt, efficient service. Before renewing your household insurance, or business insurance policy — we are certain that several minutes on the phone, or a short visit from our specialist will be to your advantage.

When it comes to insurance it pays to deal with the experts at GOSHEN.

AVIV STOCKS ries of new all-time ghs established

AVIV. — As if drawn by a magnet to the equity market, a series of almost 100 new all-time high prices were established yesterday in this strong interest. It appears that some investors taking profits recently made in index-linked bond market and chiding the funds into the share market. It of this activity has resulted in this session of sweeping price rises. There were very much in evidence in the commercial banking sector, where prices rose between ten and 20 per cent.

Mortgage banks and investment companies were also very much in evidence. At the outset of the week we noted that certain segments of the share market stand to benefit more than others from the New Economic Policy. The action of the day appears to confirm these premises. The estimates of the future earnings of commercial banks, for example, are now revised upwards, and of course, calls for a revision of current prices.

Bank shares completed a spectacular week in which the share rose by no less than 38 per cent. They added another 100 points today, to 1,270. The shares have seen the recent devaluation of the pound by about 15 per cent. The bank's options now the shares could have been purchased yesterday, since they were all "buyers only" and fixed five and a half pence.

Plan (as yet secret) to recoup all money lost in collapse of British-Israel Bank

By MACABEE DEAN
Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — It takes a lot of character to lose several million dollars in Israel, and then say: "Of course, I want my money back, who wouldn't?" But more important to me than the money is to see that the State of Israel flourishes.

Donald Tanselle, president of the Merchants Bank of Indianapolis, Indiana, is one of the 20 non-Jewish bankers, scattered throughout the U.S., who deposited a total of $100m. in the former British-Israel Bank. (Its former director-general, Yehoshua Bension, was recently pardoned after serving two years in prison for spiriting $47m. out of Israel.)

Tanselle, 53, deposited for his bank $4,750,000 in British-Israel. "Like the other bankers, we thought it was a safe and more than anything else we thought we were helping Israel," he said. "We have been able to recover 20 per cent, another 15 to 20 per cent will probably be salvaged from the bank's assets."

But Tanselle has a plan which will enable him, and the other 19

Donald Tanselle

He has put his cheque-book where his feelings are, and recently his bank bought $1m. worth of Israeli Bonds (paying a floating rate of interest, which is now 7.75 per cent). Another of the 20 banks which lost money here also bought bonds.

Here on his fourth visit now, Tanselle met, among others, Prime Minister Begin. "He is a warm man. He has a feeling for people, he is an entity in himself. It seems to me that he is the best of what we expect to see in a traditional Jew."

El Al moves closer to adopting cheaper Holiday-class fares

By DAVID LENNON
Post Aviation Correspondent

TEL AVIV. — The no-frills "Holiday-class" fare proposal of El Al chairman-designate, Mordechai Ben-Ari, took a major step towards approval yesterday when it received the support of the secretary-general of the International Air Transport Association (IATA), a company spokesman reports.

The Ben-Ari plan is to allocate most of the seats on scheduled airline flights for passengers foregoing in-flight service. These passengers would pay considerably less than the regular passengers, who get served with food and drink.

Ben-Ari believes that the lower prices would attract more passengers, and help the airlines increase their load factors.

A number of airlines currently attending the IATA annual conference in Madrid are reported enthusiastic about the plan. They see it as a possible way of rescuing them from the economic difficulties which many of them face.

Ben-Ari is seeking IATA approval for the plan, and the endorsement by

Gov't buys back Tel Aviv plot

The Knesset Finance Committee is inclined to allocate $2.2m. for the repurchase of a plot in Tel Aviv's Manshiya quarter, which the Canadian Pacific company (CP) bought for $1.1m. in 1973 from the Israel Lands Administration.

Canadian Pacific had planned to build a 500-room hotel on the site, but its plans were frustrated by the 1974 building freeze. Meanwhile the company had spent $700,000 on land improvements. Inspectors set the basic value of the plot today at $1.5m., so that together with the improvements its value is now $2.2m.

The Treasury prefers to repurchase the land from CP, because otherwise it would have to come across with a low-interest loan for about $1.8m. It had promised the Canadian investors.

The Knesset Finance Committee has established a subcommittee to set the exact terms of the deal.

Canadian Pacific, meanwhile, has decided to assist the company which is putting up the Laromne hotel in the Manshiya quarter to finish the project. CP will then manage the completed hotel, as it does other hotels here.

Fuel companies need IL200m. to keep going after NEP

Jerusalem Post Reporter

HAIFA. — A credit crisis involving almost IL200m. has developed among the country's fuel distributors as a result of the higher prices brought on by the NEP.

The Paz company alone, whose sales account for 45 per cent of the market, faces a shortage of IL100m. "This is an amount we can't finance to maintain the credit terms we customarily offer our customers," general manager Yehayahu Lachover said this week. "The Government's 90-day credit freeze forces us to shorten our credit period by one quarter. We had to advise our 185 filling station operators to cut the credit period they in turn give their customers."

The country's petrol stations have warned that unless the traditional credit terms are upheld, the sale of fuels would stop. Lachover explained that Paz stations are granted credit for periods varying from two to eleven days, with an average of a little over three days. This involves a total credit, at any given time, of over IL25m. or IL30m. a day, he said.

"What the station operators now want would increase that three-day period to five days, which would mean for us an extra IL25m. of credit for this group of customers alone, which accounts for only 10 to 12 per cent of our total sales," Lachover explained. "We have

Anti-dumping regulations

By SHLOMO MAOZ
Jerusalem Post Reporter

The imposition of a levy on textiles imported from countries with which Israel has no special trade agreement was recently ordered by Yigal Hurvitz, the Minister of Industry, Commerce and Tourism.

The order is in connection with the new regulations going into effect in two weeks, which will permit about 85 per cent of all imports to enter the country without license restrictions. The aim of the order is to prevent the dumping here of cheap merchandise from Taiwan, Hongkong and Korea. The order is not, however, intended

Histadrut opposes any change in allocation of new settlements

By YITZHAK OKED
Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — The Histadrut's Agricultural Centre, representing 75 per cent of the agriculture in the country, has come out against a recent proposal of the private Farmers' Union which calls for the abolition of the present system by which new settlements are allotted according to political parties.

Simha Assaf, secretary-general of the Agricultural Centre, explained Sunday that all the activities concerning settlements are activated after the Government approves them. The Jewish Agency's Settlement Department then prepares the site for settlement, and afterwards the settlement plan is transferred to the Agricultural Centre's settlement committee, which decides which group will receive the site.

Assaf added that members of this settlement committee include groups which are not incorporated in the Histadrut's Agricultural Centre. He also emphasized that this committee only proposes whom to give a certain site, but that the final decision is always with the Ministerial Committee on Settlements.

take on all challenges. Her ability to plough the rough red tape is phenomenal, and she is an expert at knowing where that little extra warmth is most needed. She also keeps a close watch on new experiments and asks for help from the Toy Fund when necessary to promote them.

Another pre-drive deal — the Eddy Schorr kindergarten for children with cerebral palsy is ever so happy with a record player, the gift of Maggie Eisenstadt of Jerusalem. We were able to make the tie-up as soon as the record player was offered to the Toy Fund. We knew this Eddy Schorr kindergarten was very much in need of equipment ever since their first floor collapsed last year. Everything is fixed now and they gained the building next door in the operation and so have also been able to take in more children.

One of the Toy Fund's most successful projects in the past few years has been the gift of watches to Bat and Bar Mitzva children who have nobody but a special worker to worry about them. We are pleased that we already have 200 watches we bought with money that came in during the last half year. This was a good move, for the prices of watches has risen so rapidly we might not have been able to buy so many.

For our pre-Hanukkah distribution, gifts to children with cerebral palsy and in family homes, are also of the utmost importance. District Ministry of Welfare social workers, as well as those with municipality social service departments are especially involved in these projects. About 7,000 children are cared for, and all gifts are individual.

GOVERNMENT INSTITUTIONS for children in all kinds of distress, are also on the pre-Hanukkah list. These institutions are all special, so that gifts must suit their specific needs.

Also on our running projects list is the library we set up at Beit Hamazl in Jerusalem's Shmuel Hanavi quarter in memory of our late editor, Ted Lurie. The library now has 7,000 volumes and it is growing fast. It has a special section in a separate room to help children with their homework.

New and special to our 29th drive, the Toy Fund is endorsing nurseries in the children's ward of the new Shaare Zedek Hospital in Jerusalem. Our association with Shaare Zedek has been a long one — all through the years we have helped them make their Hanukkah party in the children's ward something special, with enough left over to keep the ward going most of the year.

Refugees at the Shati were again lining up for their UNRWA rations, to accept them for the protest the recent cuts in

tribution centre said that a delegation of the refugees had spoken with the UNRWA local administrators, who told them that they would have to accept six kilograms of flour this month instead of the usual 10 — or nothing at all.

UNRWA director of operations Magnus Ehrenstrom told The Jerusalem Post yesterday that next month the refugees will receive no flour ration, as the quota set by UNRWA Commissioner-General Thomas McGillicuddy will have been exhausted with the November portion. UNRWA has been forced to cut its flour rations in the Middle East due to a budgetary deficit.

UNRWA administrators emphasized that refugees at only two out of its six Gaza Strip distribution centres had refused the ration in the past week. The other was Nuseirat.

UNRWA is also engaged in a wage dispute with its 3,500 local employees, who are demanding that their dollar-linked salaries be raised in accordance with the new exchange rates.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 11, 1977 • VOL. XLVII, No. 14163

Welcome, President Sadat!

AHLAN WASAHLAN YA RAYIS!

We are confident it would not take more than a few hours to convene the special session of the Knesset plenum which you have offered to address personally in an effort to cut through the procedural knots on the way to the Geneva conference.

And it would not take even that long to set the tables in the Knesset's Chagall Hall for the state dinner to end all state dinners which would follow.

We only hope that our hospitality will match the thousands and One Nights welcome which you and your countrymen cannot fail to accord to Prime Minister Begin on his proposed return visit to Cairo.

Theatrics? Certainly. President Sadat has for some time established his credentials as one of the most consummate political hams on today's international stage. It is refreshing to note, however, that our own Mr. Begin is no slouch in that department, either, although his style is somewhat different.

But even in the field of political theatrics come styles are much to be preferred to others. Mr. Sadat made his dramatic proposal to go to the Knesset in order, as he said, to avert the unnecessary death of even one Egyptian soldier. This brings to mind an earlier Sadat performance of several years ago in which he declared, just as heatedly, that he would not flinch at paying the price of a million Egyptian dead and 100,000 casualties among his soldiers in order to regain "this conquered territory."

It is far too early to assess the importance of Mr. Sadat's latest pyrotechnics, and judging by past history Israel has good reason to maintain its sceptical stance. Nonetheless, several points do stand out as welcome novelties:

President Sadat made his proposal in Arabic to a domestic, political audience, the Egyptian parliament. The fact that an Arab leader could bring himself to speak to his own people in a manner hitherto reserved for foreign consumption only, can be seen as a step in the right direction, no matter how small.

It should also not be overlooked that Mr. Sadat's proposal, no matter how histrionic, was greeted by wild applause from the members of the Egyptian parliament; and this on the very day that Israel's air force was hitting hard at PLO bases in Lebanon.

Mr. Sadat would seem to be engaged in two games simultaneously: pressing hard for going to Geneva, despite internal opposition in the Arab camp, on the assumption that American pressure against Israel at Geneva will lead to the best realistic deal the Arab world can hope for; and alternatively, laying the groundwork for the Arab case in the forthcoming play — "Who killed the Geneva Conference and the prospects for peace?"

Mr. Begin has adopted the correct stance in deciding to play the game rather than huffily rejecting President Sadat's initiative. We would not urge the Knesset staff to be on standby call. But, on the other hand, if President Sadat really means it, the "Ahlán wasahlan" is heartfelt.

New Histadrut realities

THE MUTUAL muscle-flexing on the part of Labour and the Likud which upstaged this week's Histadrut convention provides ample evidence that neither party has yet come to terms with the changed circumstances following last May's national elections.

The Histadrut was the epitome of a state within a state in the pre-1948 days and served as a major arm of the Labour dominated nation-building establishment in the first 29 years after independence. Thus, the idea of a government foisting a new economic policy on it without prior consultation, and even by admittedly resorting to subterfuge, has come as an understandable shock and affront to the Histadrut establishment.

On the other hand, the Likud's success in the May elections seems to have gone to its head to such an extent as to blind its leaders to the fact that Labour did retain control of the largest and most powerful organization in the country in the polls held only a month later.

It is thus equally understandable that Likud leaders should tend to interpret legitimate trade union opposition to the most discriminatory aspects of the new economic policy as part of a Labour plot to unseat the Government.

Labour's illiness in refusing to extend the convention's formal greetings to the Government in power and the much more worrisome resort by the Herut faction to premeditated strong-arm tactics, evoking bitter memories of the Revisionists' attempts to break the Histadrut in the 1930s, are examples of this mutual failure to come to terms with realities.

Prime Minister Begin should have realized that succumbing to the temptation of labelling the Histadrut under the leadership of its moderate Secretary-General "bolshhevik," would inevitably lead to the hurling back of the epithet "fascist" at him and his cohorts.

It is clear that the Labour Party which controls the Histadrut would like to wrest governmental power from the hands of the Likud; and equally, that the Likud would dearly like to cut the Histadrut down to size in accordance with its concept of what a tame trade union should be.

What is sorely needed, however, are new rules of the game within whose limits this democratically legitimate contest can be conducted. There is a patent danger that an attempt to use the Government's power to break the Histadrut, or conversely, to use the Histadrut's power to undermine the Government in extra-parliamentary fashion, will lead instead to economic and social chaos.

Mr. Meshel is to be congratulated, in this super-heated atmosphere, for his declaration on television on Wednesday night that his patriotism would not permit him to call a general strike, no matter what the provocation. It is to be hoped that his approach remains dominant within Labour, and that it is reciprocated on the part of the Government and the Likud.

A crumbling consensus

Former Finance Minister Yehoshua Rabinowitz, silent until now about his successor's economic policies, speaks out — critically — in an interview with MEIR MERHAV.

EVEN SOFT-SPOKEN, mild-mannered Yehoshua Rabinowitz is bitter and angry these days, as he surveys the new economic policy sprung so suddenly on the country by his successor, Finance Minister Simcha Ehrlich. Until October 23, Ehrlich did no more than to follow in the footsteps of Rabinowitz, who was at the helm of Israel's economy until five months ago.

Rabinowitz is bitter because the ruling coalition has not contented itself with superimposing its own policy on what existed before. It has done its best to drag into the dust all Rabinowitz's achievements in the last 30 years, and his own in the last three. Rabinowitz is also bitter about "his" top officials at the Treasury — that preterian guard which switched allegiance so rapidly, so easily, so eagerly. He would be because he is powerless to change the new reality. The bitterness and disappointment is not just personal. In all he says, in all that he keeps silent about, and in the way he voices his criticism, there remains a burden of national responsibility which weighs Rabinowitz down and hampers his effectiveness as a leading member of the Opposition.

It is difficult to say that Yehoshua Rabinowitz is angry. Real anger simply is not an attribute one normally couples with his name. But beneath the surface there seethes an outrage over what the Likud government has done — a realization that the accepted social, economic and political structure of Israel, as it emerged over more than two generations of practical Zionism, is on the verge of a fundamental transformation. A transformation Rabinowitz does not like. Economic rationality, even if it were pure, is not applicable to the building of a country and a nation.

RABINOWITZ is still preoccupied with the defence of his own policies, as much as with a critique of the present Government's. Contrary to established military doctrine, he still seems to think that defence is the best attack. But Simcha Ehrlich may have jolted him out of that posture. The changes are too great, and those that loom ahead even more so. Consolation in the laurels of the past is difficult to find.

The present economic programmes, says Rabinowitz, clearly brings to light the Likud's fundamental differences with the Alignment. For the first 100 days of grace, he kept silent. He saw a policy not much different from his own — and the interests of party politics could not bring him to turn upon what he himself had engineered so recently. Even now he makes a point of conceding — not grudgingly — that Ehrlich's policy has some positive aspects. He has no complaint, in principle, against making the economic mechanism more flexible, and against doing away with all kinds of distortions.

But what are "distortions," asks Yehoshua Rabinowitz. For 30 years, he says, we built this country using a system of planned distortions. We called them incentives. They were oriented towards certain purposes. We gave incentives to settlement, to the housing of new immigrants, to new development areas, to exports. We tried to be selective, and thus to economize on means. We may not have succeeded everywhere, with everything. But we built, we created. We now have an economy with $5b. in exports — one of the highest export amounts, per capita, in the world.

Distortions are not necessarily a dirty word to Rabinowitz. His world is not that of the economic theorist, his face to the blackboard and his back to his living students. Not every deviation from the straight and narrow path of economic rationality is negative. There are positive distortions.

Rabinowitz sees Ehrlich's policy as dangerous, economically counter-productive and unnecessary, and socially unjust and damaging. There was not even the slightest attempt to ensure a minimum of equity in the distribution of the burden — assuming, which he denies immediately, that the burden was necessary at all at the present time. Only a few months ago Ehrlich even abolished the procurement tax. That, Rabinowitz says, incites mainly on the affluent. It brought in $300m. — as much as will be cut from welfare services.

Ehrlich's policy is clearly class-oriented. It's good for speculators, for tax-evaders, for merchants, for building contractors who will get orders from those who convert dollars into lire and buy real estate before it goes up in price. It does nothing for the real producers of the country — exporters — and imposes an unprecedented burden on wage earners.

Rabinowitz, with the sense born of long experience, scorns the theories and policies which rely on the so-called free play of the market forces. That, he says, exists only in Milton Friedman's textbooks. In reality, there are two or three firms in each branch, which fix prices — and now they have gone on a spree in which they jack up prices not only for cost increases already incurred, but in expectation of those expected six months from now.

His own policies, Rabinowitz says, provided a chance to slow inflation down within two or three years to tolerable levels. But the new policy has built a new fire under inflation, which will remain high at least until the end of the decade. It will undermine investment, development, and any basis for reasonable labour relations.

SARCASM, SCORN and outrage are not really in Yehoshua Rabinowitz's nature. But there is a thin smile on his lips — a smile in which there is no humour — when he recalls Ehrlich's hope that Israel "will become an international financial centre." "What centre?" he asks. Like Vaduz, which became a financial sanctuary because it has no workers? Who and what ever prevented foreigners from investing here and taking on their money out again, except objective conditions? Have these conditions changed? To lift currency control in our precarious situation is an irresponsible gamble.

Moreover, the former finance minister argues, there was absolutely no need for this policy. Since 1974, his own policy had saved $2b. in imports, had reduced the trade gap by $1.2b., and increased the foreign currency reserves to an unheard-of level. Ehrlich could never have dared to do what he did, Rabinowitz says, had it not been for the accomplishments of the previous policy — and now they talk of having left them a "sacred earth" and a "demoralized system."

But, I pressed, even Labour governments had carried out massive devaluations — in 1968, in 1972 and in 1974. What is the difference? And moreover, what is the great difference between a creeping devaluation, which Rabinowitz and his advisers can claim as their innovation, and the floating of the lira?

Rabinowitz has his answer ready. All previous massive devaluations, he says, had been necessary, even if not completely successful. Moreover, they were never as one-sided, in terms of income distribution, as this one. At least there should have been a capital levy. And this devaluation was completely unnecessary, at least at the present time. The massive devaluation in 1974 came right after the Yom Kippur War, which cost us the GNP of a whole year and wiped our trade deficit from $1b. to $4.5b.

WHAT SHOULD have been done? The unhappy former finance minister — caught between the dynamic growth period of a Pinhas Sapir and the shards of a social and economic system shattered by the Yom Kippur War — says that there should have been fine-tuning of the economy. It was progressing. There had been a huge improvement in the trade balance. Another two or three years would have done the trick.

But why can't the present policy succeed? — Because achievements in the field of social welfare, in living standards, in the entire web of social and welfare relations, cannot be abolished or reduced overnight. The present devaluation will require a drastic cut in welfare services, and in the working population's living standards. They won't take it. Nobody can reduce living standards by 12 per cent at once. Therefore, we shall enter a new inflationary spiral.

THE ALTERNATIVE is unemployment. And Rabinowitz sees Ehrlich's policy as consciously aiming at high unemployment. That, he says, undermines the country's strength. The knowledge that there is employment back home, he says, is one of our major defences. Take that away from the soldier who mans the tank, and he will not be able to fight as he did.

Full employment, for Yehoshua Rabinowitz, is not just a social goal. It is one of the bulwarks of our very defence capability, of our remaining a Zionist country.

Moreover, he says bitterly, the whole image projected by the Likud — of a new era of freedom — is nothing, but a fraud upon the public. What free-floating exchange rate, he asks? The float is a "dirty" float, with massive intervention by the Bank of Israel. It differs little from the administrative fixing of exchange rates before — except that it is less visible.

The difference is that it is more dangerous — irresponsibly so. He reminds us that only a year and a half ago, sterling slumped and only massive aid from the International Monetary Fund and other European countries made it possible for Britain to weather the storm. Who will help us, he asks. Was it not the Alignment the foundations for it not the "depoliticization" of devaluation, but of the civil service, of the our life, which is possible?

There is no clear and a vague sense that the return to basic values, renaissance of values, our own times, our own Apart from the states Alignment represents, that the liberalism of the Likud of fraud, there is no clue of where the heroic pioneering, social Zionism went off the became a burlesque "pharisaic" (may French in vogue, save mindless transportation from America) nationalistic overtones.

YEHOSHUA Rabinowitz's world has tumbled there is something very Prime Minister, who of crises incited crowd storm the Knesset, and about "extra-parliamentary" protests. Rabinowitz's Histadrut is and is not political. How questions of income distribution-political? He is a demagogue of implicitly did, that Israel has mis-foreign aid. Have we a tion with it? Have we wars with it? Were supermen around to de have not those who ne- beauty of wealth obtain same source? Rabinowitz also senses that the critique will have to be radical, go back to the basics, see the implications is road back to a revival thereby ultimately to p — but who will take the the thousand-mile mar-

POSTSCRIPTS

NOW THAT President Sadat has expressed his willingness to consider the, for him, gigantic step of coming to the Knesset, we can safely tell the story of the two Egyptian delegates whom we met at a recent international women's conference.

We were happy, though not stunned, to use the Egyptian President's word, to find that the two women, one elderly, one young, actually responded to our overtures. Our extended band was shaken, our "Salaam" returned with "Ahlán w'achlan" and our suggestion that we sit down for a chat ("just tell us whether the chocolates at Groppi's are as good as they used to be") agreed to.

Actually, the conference gave us no opportunity to get together. But when we said goodbye on the final day, the elderly Egyptian said "Inshallah, by our next conference (in 1980) we shall be able to meet and talk officially. This has all been going on too long." We suggested that when peace comes we would organize a regional meeting and added that if it were held in Israel, we hoped she would come and stay with us in Jerusalem. "Thank you," came the reply, "I should like to." And we embraced — in full view of dozens of delegates.

From the heart? Oriental politeness? We thought at the time it was a case of two women talking a female lingua franca. But perhaps there really has been a shift in thinking on the other side of our southern border. F.D.

ONE'S OWN PRUDENCE IS ANOTHER'S RIGIDITY

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post

Sir, — For several years, and more so in the past few months, the United States has made it clear that it believes Israel is unreasonably rigid with regard to the return of territories occupied since 1967.

Israel's governments under every Prime Minister since 1967 have responded that they cannot afford to go back to the old borders because these were not defensible, and because it would mean giving up too much to governments and forces that have made war on Israel four times in 30 years. Furthermore, these governments and forces maintain a state of war to this day.

It may be helpful, in trying to understand the intractability of the Arab-Israeli dispute and to assess American policies and attitudes, to see it from an experience very close to us at this time. President Carter recently signed the new Panama Canal treaties, yet a difficult struggle lies ahead for their ratification. And what is it that is up for ratification?

It is a set of treaties proposing to alter the status of a piece of territory and a strategic asset — the Canal and the Canal Zone — that the United States acquired through the unprovoked use of its power against a South American country 74 years ago. The major concession that the United States makes to Panama in these treaties is to terminate its control of the Canal and the Zone in another 22 years. But even then, this country retains the right to intervene to protect the security of the waterway.

The closest major U.S. population centre to the Canal Zone is Houston, Texas. The distance is about 1,800 miles as the crow flies. The chances of Panama's threatening the lives and homes of the people in that or any other American community are remote indeed. Yet the treaties took 14 years to negotiate, and an all-out effort headed by the President himself is required to secure Senate approval.

Viewed from this perspective, it may become more plausible why Israel is reluctant to move as the U.S. and many other nations around the world would like her to move. For what is at stake is not a strategic waterway and a small zone 1,800 miles away, but every single city, town and village in Israel, which could come under direct attack. Arab forces would be at the gates of Jerusalem, some 15-20 miles from Tel Aviv, and a mere nine miles from Netanya.

The party Israel would have to contend with is not Panama whose President came to Washington, shook hands with President Carter, and broke bread with him, but a whole array of countries who have maintained a state of war ever since Israel came into being, refuse even to recognize her existence, and refuse to sit down with her representatives in the same room.

The United States "occupied" the Canal Zone for more than 60 years before she agreed even to discuss a change in its status with Panama. The change that the two countries agreed on in almost a generation's time of negotiation is of a kind that Israel might legitimately be asked to consider such as 22 more years of control over the administered territories, or at least those closest to her homeland. If in the case of the Panama Canal, even this kind of arrangement faces a tough test in American public opinion and in the U.S. State, clearly anything less favourable, like turning over the Canal sooner, to forces with a declared and demonstrated hostility to the United States, would not even have been negotiable.

With what justice, then, does the United States speak critically and at times threateningly to a friendly nation because that nation is reluctant to risk its very national existence?
